(C) Background information.—The President shall also submit such further background or other information as Congress may require for its consideration of the plan.

(4) Amendments to plan.—Any time during the period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to it, but before any resolution has been ordered reported in either House, the President, or the designee of the President, may make amendments or modifications to the plan, which modifications or revisions shall thereafter be treated as a part of the reorganization plan originally transmitted and shall not affect in any way the time limits otherwise provided for in this section. The President, or the designee of the President, may withdraw the plan any time prior to the conclusion of 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress following the date on which the plan is submitted to Congress.

(b) Additional Contents of Reorganization Plan.—A reorganization plan—

Any reorganization plan containing provisions required by paragraph (4) shall provide for the transfer of unexpended balances only if such balances are used for the purposes for which the appropriation was originally made.

(c) Effective Date and Publication of Reorganization Plans.—

(1) Effective date.—Except as provided under paragraph (3), a reorganization plan shall be effective upon approval by the President of a resolution (as defined in subsection (f)) with respect to such plan, only if such resolution is passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate, within the first period of 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to Congress.

(B) Effect.—A statute enacted, and a regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by an agency or function affected by a reorganization under this section, before the effective date of the reorganization, has, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, the same effect as if the reorganization had not been made. However, if the statute, regulation, or other action has vested the functions in the agency from which it is removed under the reorganization plan, the function, insofar as it is to be exercised after the plan becomes effective, shall be deemed as vested in the agency under which the function is placed in the plan.

(2) Pending legal proceedings.—A suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of an agency or other officer of the United States, in the officer's official capacity or in relation to the discharge of the officer's official duties, does not abate by reason of the taking effect of a reorganization plan under this section. On motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, the court may allow the suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained by or against the successor of the head or officer under the reorganization effected by the plan or, if there is no successor, against such agency or officer as the President designates.

(e) Rules of Senate and House of Representatives On Reorganization Plans.—Subsections (f) through (i) are enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they are deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of resolutions with respect to any reorganization plans transmitted to Congress (in accordance with subsection (a)(3) of this section); and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with the full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(f) Terms of Resolution.—For the purposes of subsections (e) through (i), "resolution" means only a joint resolution of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That Congress approves the reorganization plan transmitted to Congress by the President on , 20 .", and includes such modifications and revisions as are submitted by the President under subsection (a)(4). The blank spaces therein are to be filled appropriately. The term does not include a resolution which specifies more than 1 reorganization plan.

(B) introduced (by request) in the Senate by the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, or by a Member or Members of the Senate designated by such chairman.

(2) Referral.—A resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House (and all resolutions with respect to the same plan shall be referred to the same committee) by the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The committee shall make its recommendations to the House of Representatives or the Senate, respectively, within 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress following the date of such resolution's introduction.

(h) Discharge of Committee Considering Resolution.—If the committee to which is referred a resolution introduced pursuant to subsection (g)(1) has not reported such a resolution or identical resolution at the end of 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after its introduction, such committee shall be deemed to be discharged from further consideration of such resolution and such resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House involved.

(i) PROCEDURE AFTER REPORT OR DISCHARGE OF COMMITTEES; DEBATE; VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE.—

(1) PROCEDURE.—When the committee has reported, or has been deemed to be discharged (under subsection (h)) from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. The motion shall not be subject to amendment, or to any motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(2) DEBATE.—Debate on the resolution, and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between individuals favoring and individuals opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. An amendment to, or a motion to recommit the resolution is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is passed or rejected shall not be in order.

(3) VOTE ON FINAL PASSAGE.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on the resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the resolution shall occur.

(4) APPEALS.—Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be decided without debate.

(5) PRIOR PASSAGE.—If, prior to the passage by 1 House of a resolution of that House, that House receives a resolution with respect to the same reorganization plan from the other House, then—

(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the resolution of the other House.

SEC. 735. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS.

(a) SEAL.—The Department shall have a seal, whose design is subject to the approval of the President.

(b) PARTICIPATION OF MEMBERS OF THE ARMED FORCES.—With respect to the Department, the Secretary shall have the same authorities that the Secretary of Transportation has with respect to the Department of Transportation under section 324 of title 49, United States Code.

(c) REDELEGATION OF FUNCTIONS.—Unless otherwise provided in the delegation or by law, any function delegated under this Act may be redelegated to any subordinate.

Any such transferred authority may not be exercised by an official from whom it is transferred upon transfer of such agency, program, or function to the Secretary or another Federal official pursuant to this Act. This Act does not alter or diminish the regulatory authority of any other executive agency, except to the extent that this Act transfers such authority from the agency.

(c) USE OF TRANSFERRED FUNDS.—

(1) IN GENERAL.—Except as may be provided in this subsection or in an appropriations Act in accordance with subsection (e), balances of appropriations and any other funds or assets transferred under this Act—

(A) shall be available only for the purposes for which they were originally available;

(B) shall remain subject to the same conditions and limitations provided by the law originally appropriating or otherwise making available the amount, including limitations and notification requirements related to the reprogramming of appropriated funds; and

(2) TRANSMITTAL.—

(B) TIMING.—The reorganization plan shall be delivered to both Houses on the same day and to each House while it is in session, except that no more than 2 plans may be pending before Congress at 1 time.

(3) CONTENT.—

(A) IN GENERAL.—The transmittal message of the reorganization plan shall—

(ii) include an estimate of any reduction or increase in expenditures (itemized so far as practicable);

(iii) include detailed information addressing the impacts of the reorganization on the employees of any agency affected by the plan, and what steps will be taken to mitigate any impacts of the plan on the employees of the agency;

(II) the anticipated nature and substance of any orders, directives, and other administrative and operations actions which are expected to be required for completing or implementing the reorganization; and

(ii) contain a projected timetable for completion of the implementation process.

(C) BACKGROUND INFORMATION.—The President shall also submit such further background or other information as Congress may require for its consideration of the plan.

(4) AMENDMENTS TO PLAN.—Any time during the period of 60 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to it, but before any resolution has been ordered reported in either House, the President, or the designee of the President, may make amendments or modifications to the plan, which modifications or revisions shall thereafter be treated as a part of the reorganization plan originally transmitted and shall not affect in any way the time limits otherwise provided for in this section. The President, or the designee of the President, may withdraw the plan any time prior to the conclusion of 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress following the date on which the plan is submitted to Congress.

(b) ADDITIONAL CONTENTS OF REORGANIZATION PLAN.—A reorganization plan—

(1) may change the name of an agency affected by a reorganization and the title of its head, and shall designate the name of an agency resulting from a reorganization and the title of its head;

(2) may provide for the appointment and pay of the head and 1 or more officers of any agency (including an agency resulting from a consolidation or other type of reorganization) if the message transmitting the plan declares, that by reason of a reorganization made by the plan the provisions are necessary;

(3) shall provide for the transfer or other disposition of the records, property, and personnel affected by a reorganization;

(4) shall provide for the transfer of such unexpended balances of appropriations, and of other funds, available for use in connection with a function or agency affected by a reorganization, as necessary by reason of the reorganization for use in connection with the functions affected by the reorganization, or for the use of the agency which shall have the functions after the reorganization plan is effective; and

(5) shall provide for terminating the affairs of an agency abolished.

A reorganization plan containing provisions authorized by paragraph (2) may provide that the head of an agency be an individual or a commission or board with more than 1 member. In the case of an appointment of the head of such an agency, the term of office may not be fixed at more than 4 years, the pay may not be at a rate in excess of that found to be applicable to comparable officers in the executive branch, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Any reorganization plan containing provisions required by paragraph (4) shall provide for the transfer of unexpended balances only if such balances are used for the purposes for which the appropriation was originally made.

(c) Effective Date and Publication of Reorganization Plans.—

(1) Effective date.—Except as provided under paragraph (3), a reorganization plan shall be effective upon approval by the President of a resolution (as defined in subsection (f)) with respect to such plan, only if such resolution is passed by the House of Representatives and the Senate, within the first period of 90 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after the date on which the plan is transmitted to Congress.

(2) Session of congress.—For the purpose of this chapter—

(A) continuity of session is broken only by an adjournment of Congress sine die; and

(B) the days on which either House is not in session because of an adjournment of more than 3 days to a day certain are excluded in the computation of any period of time in which Congress is in continuous session.

(3) Later effective date.—Under provisions contained in a reorganization plan, any provision thereof may be effective at a time later than the date on which the plan otherwise is effective.

(4) Publication of plan.—A reorganization plan which is effective shall be printed—

(A) Definition.—In this paragraph, the term "regulation or other action" means a regulation, rule, order, policy, determination, directive, authorization, permit, privilege, requirement, designation, or other action.

(B) Effect.—A statute enacted, and a regulation or other action made, prescribed, issued, granted, or performed in respect of or by an agency or function affected by a reorganization under this section, before the effective date of the reorganization, has, except to the extent rescinded, modified, superseded, or made inapplicable by or under authority of law or by the abolition of a function, the same effect as if the reorganization had not been made. However, if the statute, regulation, or other action has vested the functions in the agency from which it is removed under the reorganization plan, the function, insofar as it is to be exercised after the plan becomes effective, shall be deemed as vested in the agency under which the function is placed in the plan.

(2) Pending legal proceedings.—A suit, action, or other proceeding lawfully commenced by or against the head of an agency or other officer of the United States, in the officer's official capacity or in relation to the discharge of the officer's official duties, does not abate by reason of the taking effect of a reorganization plan under this section. On motion or supplemental petition filed at any time within 12 months after the reorganization plan takes effect, showing a necessity for a survival of the suit, action, or other proceeding to obtain a settlement of the questions involved, the court may allow the suit, action, or other proceeding to be maintained by or against the successor of the head or officer under the reorganization effected by the plan or, if there is no successor, against such agency or officer as the President designates.

(e) Rules of Senate and House of Representatives On Reorganization Plans.—Subsections (f) through (i) are enacted by Congress—

(1) as an exercise of the rulemaking power of the Senate and the House of Representatives, respectively, and as such they are deemed a part of the rules of each House, respectively, but applicable only with respect to the procedure to be followed in that House in the case of resolutions with respect to any reorganization plans transmitted to Congress (in accordance with subsection (a)(3) of this section); and they supersede other rules only to the extent that they are inconsistent therewith; and

(2) with the full recognition of the constitutional right of either House to change the rules (so far as relating to the procedure of that House) at any time, in the same manner and to the same extent as in the case of any other rule of that House.

(f) Terms of Resolution.—For the purposes of subsections (e) through (i), "resolution" means only a joint resolution of Congress, the matter after the resolving clause of which is as follows: "That Congress approves the reorganization plan transmitted to Congress by the President on 20 .", and includes such modifications and revisions as are submitted by the President under subsection (a)(4). The blank spaces therein are to be filled appropriately. The term does not include a resolution which specifies more than 1 reorganization plan.

(g) Introduction and Reference of Resolution.—

(1) Introduction.—No later than the first day of session following the day on which a reorganization plan is transmitted to the House of Representatives and the Senate under subsection (a), a resolution, as defined in subsection (f), shall be—

(A) introduced (by request) in the House by the chairman of the Government Reform Committee of the House, or by a Member or Members of the House designated by such chairman; and

(B) introduced (by request) in the Senate by the chairman of the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, or by a Member or Members of the Senate designated by such chairman.

(2) Referral.—A resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be referred to the Committee on Governmental Affairs of the Senate and the Committee on Government Reform of the House (and all resolutions with respect to the same plan shall be referred to the same committee) by the President of the Senate or the Speaker of the House of Representatives, as the case may be. The committee shall make its recommendations to the House of Representatives or the Senate, respectively, within 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress following the date of such resolution's introduction.

(h) Discharge of Committee Considering Resolution.—If the committee to which is referred a resolution introduced pursuant to subsection (g)(1) has not reported such a resolution or identical resolution at the end of 75 calendar days of continuous session of Congress after its introduction, such committee shall be deemed to be discharged from further consideration of such resolution and such resolution shall be placed on the appropriate calendar of the House involved.

(i) Procedure After Report or Discharge of Committees; Debate; Vote On Final Passage.—

(1) Procedure.—When the committee has reported, or has been deemed to be discharged (under subsection (h)) from further consideration of, a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, it is at any time thereafter in order (even though a previous motion to the same effect has been disagreed to) for any Member of the respective House to move to proceed to the consideration of the resolution. The motion is highly privileged and is not debatable. The motion shall not be subject to amendment, or to any motion to postpone, or a motion to proceed to the consideration of other business. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the motion is agreed to or disagreed to shall not be in order. If a motion to proceed to the consideration of the resolution is agreed to, the resolution shall remain the unfinished business of the respective House until disposed of.

(2) Debate.—Debate on the resolution, and on all debatable motions and appeals in connection therewith, shall be limited to not more than 10 hours, which shall be divided equally between individuals favoring and individuals opposing the resolution. A motion further to limit debate is in order and not debatable. An amendment to, or a motion to recommit the resolution is not in order. A motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution is passed or rejected shall not be in order.

(3) Vote on final passage.—Immediately following the conclusion of the debate on the resolution with respect to a reorganization plan, and a single quorum call at the conclusion of the debate if requested in accordance with the rules of the appropriate House, the vote on final passage of the resolution shall occur.

(4) Appeals.—Appeals from the decisions of the Chair relating to the application of the rules of the Senate or the House of Representatives, as the case may be, to the procedure relating to a resolution with respect to a reorganization plan shall be decided without debate.

(A) the procedure in that House shall be the same as if no resolution had been received from the other House; but

(B) the vote on final passage shall be on the resolution of the other House.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 2003

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of Calendar No. 490, S. 2506, the intelligence authorization; that the committee-reported amendments be withdrawn; the only amendment in order to be a Graham amendment; that the substitute amendment be agreed to, the bill, as amended, be read three times, and the Intelligence Committee then be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 4628, the House companion, and the Senate then proceed to its consideration; that all after the enacting clause be stricken, and the text of S. 2506, as amended, be inserted in lieu thereof; that the bill be read the third time, passed, and the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table; that the Senate insist on its amendment, request a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate without intervening action or debate; and that S. 2506 be returned to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. GRAHAM. Mr. President, S. 2506, a bill to authorize appropriations for the intelligence community for fiscal year 2003, represents the first intelligence budget for the War on Terrorism—a war where intelligence is our most effective weapon. The Congress historically has considered the annual Intelligence Authorization bill to be important legislation, but now it has become a matter of national survival. Without an enhanced and effective intelligence capability integrated into the significant capabilities of the U.S. military and tightly linked to law enforcement and the new Department of Homeland Security, we will continue be at the mercy of international terrorists bent on the destruction of our society and we may suffer even more devastating attacks.

Since the tragedy of September 11, the men and women of the U.S. intelligence community have worked every day, nonstop to protect us against those who would seek to do us harm. This bill represents an important step in our effort to provide them with the necessary resources and authorities to get the job done. In its budget request for fiscal years 2003 through 2007, the administration proposes significant resource increases for our national intelligence effort. Such increases build upon substantial supplemental appropriations approved for the intelligence community for fiscal years 2001 and 2002 after September 11.

As the community has noted in past years, the challenges confronting the intelligence community have, for too long, received inadequate fiscal attention. I am encouraged by the commitment of resources proposed by the administration for fiscal year 2003 and beyond. The intelligence community is poised to benefit from an infusion of additional people and funding that can provide momentum for a range of intelligence efforts against those individuals, groups, and states—to include al-Qaida and Osama bin Laden—that threaten our security and safety. As the intelligence community is our first line of defense, the administration's fiscal year 2003 request for the National Foreign Intelligence Program is a necessary first step in correcting the deficiencies of the past.

Earlier this year, the Select Committee on Intelligence conducted a thorough review of the administration's budget request for the National Foreign Intelligence Program for fiscal year 2003. This review included an extensive examination of the individual programs and agencies—such as the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Reconnaissance Office—which comprise the U.S. intelligence community. Building on the approach we took last year, our review once again focused on specific priority areas as well as individual agencies and functions.

The committee highlighted five areas that must continue to receive priority attention in the near term if intelligence is to fulfill its role in our overall national security strategy and the ongoing war on terrorism. They are: (1) revitalizing the National Security Agency; (2) correcting deficiencies in human intelligence; (3) addressing the imbalance between intelligence collection and analysis; (4) rebuilding a robust research and development program; and (5) increasing the capabilities of measurements and signatures intelligence to fulfill key intelligence requirements. These priorities address the basic building blocks of intelligence—capabilities that will support the War on Terrorism as well as the multitude of other intelligence requirements. S. 2506 authorizes additional resources for these areas.

While the additional funding for intelligence programs goes a long way towards alleviating existing near term deficiencies, other long term problems remain to be addressed. We face a looming crisis in our ability to collect critical information from key platforms as a result of unexpected failures; a major acquisition program is experiencing significant cost overruns and schedule slippage; and, we have inadequate funding to ensure that information collected by the next generation of space-based sensors will be processed, exploited, and disseminated appropriately to intelligence analysts.

Higher levels or resources, however, will not address all of the important challenges which confront the intelligence community. The intelligence community must overcome an aversion to risk that has crept into the culture since the end of the cold war. The world will be a dangerous and unstable place for foreseeable future. In order to protect our country, we will need to deal with unsavory characters and we will need to operate in unsafe parts of the world. The CIA has suffered casualties in the war in Afghanistan and we must steel ourselves to the inevitability of more loss of life. Some problems, such as the intelligence community's current organization or its ability to exchange information effectively and efficiently with other government agencies, may require additional legislative actions in the future. The bicameral investigation into the events of September 11 is ongoing and I expect that the investigation will result in recommendations for actions to be taken to strengthened our intelligence community.

The bill includes legislative provisions that are important additions to the work the Intelligence Committee did last year—both in the fiscal year 2002 Intelligence Authorization Act and the USA-PATRIOT Act. I will summarize a few of these provisions:

Section 304 is designed to make improvements in the information available to the Committee each year as it prepares its budget authorizations in the areas of counterterrorism, counterproliferation, counternarcotics and counterintelligence. The provision requires the administration each year to specify in its budget submission the aggregate amount requested in each of these four critical areas. Currently, these numbers are spread throughout the budget submission in the requests for particular programs in individual agencies. The committee believes that it is essential to rational decision-making in the budget process—both for the administration and for Congress—to have "cross-cut" budget numbers so that it is clear how much money is being requested across the Government in these important areas.

Section 306 is a provision that supplements changes implemented under the USA-PATRIOT Act. Under that act, foreign intelligence information that has been collected by law enforcement agencies in the course of criminal investigations can, and in fact must, be provided to the Director of Central Intelligence to be included in the all-source analytic products prepared by intelligence analysts. In other words, these "dots" of foreign intelligence that are collected in criminal cases, including grand jury proceedings and criminal wiretaps, now flow to the intelligence community. The purpose of Section 306 is to clarify that the intelligence committees of the Congress, in the conduct of their oversight of the intelligence community, shall also have access to that law-enforcement-derived information that has been provided to the intelligence agencies. The intelligence committees cannot conduct effective oversight of the intelligence agencies if there are categories of information upon which intelligence operations and analyses are based that is off limits of the committees.

Sections 311 and 312 follow up on provisions that were included in the USA-PATRIOT Act and the FY02 Intelligence Authorization bill. Congress required the Director of Central Intelligence to review and report to the intelligence committees his recommendations of how best to create two new centers: "The National Virtual Translation Center" and the "Foreign Terrorist Asset Tracking Center." We have finally received those reports and Sections 311 and 312 establish those centers in law as part of the intelligence community. We are hopeful that the very difficult problems of translation resources in the intelligence community and the efficient and effective tracking of terrorist finances will be significantly enhanced by the creation of these centers.

Section 313 is similar to S. 2459, a bill introduced by Senator WYDEN. This excellent provision addresses the problem we have all heard so much about in the press: Is there a complete and accurate list of known or suspected international terrorists that is derived from all-source information available to the U.S. Government and that is provided to all agencies whose job is to protect our borders from penetration by terrorists? This provision requires the establishment of a "Terrorist Identification Classification System" that will be available to all Federal agencies, State and local governments and, as appropriate, to foreign governments. It will solve a problem that we have identified in our committee of the proliferation of "watch lists" in our Government—all with different suspected terrorists names, used by different agencies for different purposes.

Title V of the bill establishes in statute the National Counterintelligence Executive, the "NCIX". At the urging of our committee, the President created the NCIX in 2001 to provide the U.S. Government in the counterintelligence area with (1) strong, policy-driven leadership; (2) new and enhanced counterintelligence capabilities; and (3) coherent program, strategies and cooperative approaches. The committee's oversight of this fledging effort revealed problems, however, that Title V is designed to remedy. By establishing the NCIX in statute and placing it in the Executive Office of the President, with oversight by the intelligence committees, the committee believes that the NCIX leadership problems, resource constraints and, overall, lack of sufficient status and visibility within the Government, will be remedied.

Finally, Title VI of the bill establishes a National Commission for Review of Research and Development Programs of the United States Intelligence Community. The committee supports a strong intelligence community R & D program. Research and Development supports virtually all other intelligence community efforts by laying the groundwork for the necessary modernization and innovation of intelligence capabilities. The purpose of the Commission, to be composed of government officials and private sector experts, is to review the current state of research and development in the intelligence community and, in particular, to determine if the level of resources devoted to various efforts across the community is in line with those scientific and technological fields judged to be of the greatest importance to the intelligence needs of the future.

I mentioned earlier the tireless efforts of the men and women of the intelligence community. I am privileged as chairman of the Intelligence Committee to travel to the different agencies around Washington and to visit various installations around the world. I am consistently impressed with competence, professionalism and dedication of these individuals. For years they have been unsung heroes, serving under difficult conditions and often putting their lives on the line. They do this not for money or glory—indeed the nature of their work means that success goes unacknowledged—but because they love their country and they have a profound sense of duty. We owe these people a debt of gratitude of their sacrifices, now more than ever before.

I must mention another group of people who are critical to the process of bringing this legislation to the floor. The staff of the Senate Intelligence Committee has once again done a superb job preparing this bill. The staff is led by Al Cumming the staff director and Bill Duhnke the minority staff director. They have guided the staff through a very difficult year including the anthrax evacuation and the launching of the joint investigation with the House Intelligence Committee into events related to September 11. Through all the turmoil they kept the committee focused on our work and our oversight responsibilities. They are assisted by Kathleen McGhee, Chief Clerk, Bob Filippone, Deputy Staff Director, Jim Hensler, Deputy Minority Staff Director, Vicki Divoll, General Counsel, Chris Ford, Minority Counsel, Melvin Dubee, Budget Director, and the rest of a very talented staff. A special thanks goes to Jim Wolfe, the committee's Security Director for his efforts to ensure the security of our people and our classified materials last fall and winter when the committee was forced to work from temporary offices during the anthrax episode.

Finally and most importantly, I must acknowledge the excellent cooperation and support of Vice Chairman SHELBY. Senator SHELBY has served on the committee for almost 8 years and his experience and commitment have been critical to the success of the committee. We have not agreed on everything but we have agreed on the goal of giving the American people the best intelligence organization possible and have worked together toward that goal. I have appreciated his support and advice.

At this time in our Nation's history, our support for the U.S. intelligence community is vitally important. I urge support for this bill.

Mr. SHELBY. Mr. President, we have before us the Intelligence Authorization bill for fiscal year 2003. This is a bill which we have debated extensively in the Select Committee on Intelligence, and which we reported out in May.

Especially during the global war against terrorism in which our nation is currently engaged, it is important that we give the U.S. intelligence community the support and encouragement it needs to do its vital job—and that we hold it properly accountable for its activities through the oversight process. This bill provides healthy measures of support, encouragement, and accountability, and I urge my colleagues to support it.

While we cannot discuss actual budget figures in an unclassified setting, I can assure my colleagues that this bill provides a significant increase in funding to the U.S. intelligence community, money that it needs and will continue to need as we demand more and better work from it than ever before. Even the world's sole remaining superpower with unchallenged military supremacy cannot be everywhere, and the war on terrorism taxes our capabilities in new and often unprecedented ways. More than anything else, this current conflict is an intelligence-dependent war. We need to do everything we can to ensure that our polilcymakers and our military commanders get the best possible intelligence support. This bill will help ensure that they do.

In addition, our bill also increases the Intelligence Community's accountability to the elected representatives of the American people whose job it is to ensure proper oversight of our intelligence bureaucracy. I would like to mention just a few examples of this.

First, our bill clarifies, rationalizes, and codifies the series of reporting requirements that form such an important part of the process by which Congress obtains information and analyses of intelligence community activities.

The bill also ensures that the intelligence community will be able to continue to fulfill its reporting requirements to the intelligence oversight committees of Congress in the wake of the changes to information-sharing laws contained in the USA PATRIOT Act of 2001.

Our bill also requires that the National Foreign Intelligence Program budget provide specific breakdowns for annual budget aggregates relating to counterterrorism, counterproliferation, counternarcotics, and counterintelligence. This greater specificity, we hope, will enable Congress better to assess intelligence community resourcing decisions and ensure that the right priorities receive our support in years ahead.

The two sides of our committee have not agreed on every detail of the classified appendix that accompanies our report on this bill, but on balance we feel that this is a piece of legislation that will provide much-needed support for—and improve the accountability of—the United States intelligence community.

I urge the Senate to pass this bill promptly.

The committee amendments were withdrawn.

The amendment (No. 4752), in the nature of a substitute, was agreed to.

The bill (H.R. 4628), as amended, was read the third time and passed.

WELCOMING RABBI MELVYN MAY, WEST END TEMPLE SINAI CONGREGATION, NEPONSIT, NEW YORK

(Mr. WEINER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WEINER. Mr. Speaker, I ask the House to join me in welcoming Rabbi Melvyn May, who gave the invocation this morning. He is the spiritual leader of the West End Temple in Neponsit, New York. His path to that post took him through Connecticut, New Jersey and Brooklyn; and in each and every place he held positions of leadership in the community. He was someone who led the campaign for better understanding among our communities.

When he arrived at Neponsit, he arrived at, frankly, a most troubled time in our community. He arrived in October, 2001, one month almost to the day after the horrific attack on the World Trade Center that took so many of our neighbors in Rockaway, and he arrived also one month before a terrible plane crash in Belle Harbor, a stone's throw from his congregation's home.

During that time, Rabbi May, with dignity and with great understanding, led our community through that most difficult time. He has, in a relatively brief time, just about a year, become a force for healing and understanding throughout our community.

At this time of the holidays in the Jewish faith, he has been someone who has also led a campaign for better understanding among our very diverse communities in New York City.

I ask my colleagues in the House to join me in welcoming Rabbi May, and we ask that his accomplishments be spread across the record of this great body so that they can be shared throughout the Nation.

U.N. MUST PASS STRONG RESOLUTION ON IRAQ

(Mr. GIBBONS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, last week we heard Iraq agree to allowing U.N. weapons inspectors back into their country without conditions. All I can say is we have been down this road before.

Mr. Speaker, the United Nations must show real backbone if they want to be a meaningful organization in the 21st century. Unfortunately, we have had a decade of defiance and deception from Iraq. Let us not forget that between 1991 and 1998, in spite of 13, yes, 13 different U.N. resolutions mandating unconditional access, Iraq never allowed that to happen.

Saddam always had conditions. Inspectors were kept from presidential palaces, mosques and military installations, just to name a few locations.

The U.N. must pass a resolution that not only mandates unconditional weapons inspections, but also outlines the serious consequences for Saddam if Iraq fails to act and fails to allow U.N. inspectors to do their complete and unfettered job. The U.N. must take control and mandate unfettered inspections, and Saddam Hussein must comply. It is time for the U.N. and not Saddam Hussein to be in the driver's seat.

SUPPORT SECRET SERVICE CHILD PROTECTION ACT

(Mr. LAMPSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1

☐This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., ☐1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

Mr. LAMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I stand here today to tell you that the Secret Service does not just protect the President, they also protect missing kids. Nearly a decade ago, Congress authorized the U.S. Secret Service to participate in a multi-agency task force with the purpose of providing resources, expertise and other assistance to local law enforcement agencies and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children in cases involving missing and exploited children.

This began a strong partnership between the Secret Service and the National Center for Missing and Exploited Children and resulted in the Secret Service providing critical forensic support, including polygraph examinations, handwriting examinations, fingerprint research and identification, age progressions and regressions and audio and video enhancements to the National Center and the law enforcement in numerous missing children's cases.

However, there is a clear need to provide explicit statutory jurisdiction to the Secret Service to continue this forensic and investigative support upon request from local law enforcement, or NCMEC.

I urge Members to support the Secret Service and NCMEC by cosponsoring the Secret Service Child Protection Act, H.R. 5389. Help the Secret Service continue their work on behalf of America's children.

ENSURING AMERICA'S NATIONAL AND ECONOMIC SECURITY

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, America and the world must overcome the threat posed by Saddam Hussein's continuing effort to control or disrupt supplies of Arab oil. Successful completion of the House-Senate conference on a national energy bill is imperative to ensure America's national security and economic security.

Americans are 5 percent of the world's population, we use 25 percent of the world's oil production, and we produce 30 percent of the world's goods and services. We are the most energy-efficient and productive nation on Earth. However, America has only 2 percent of the world's known reserves of oil. America imports almost 60 percent of our oil, up from 32 percent in 1992 and 34 percent during the last Arab oil embargo. In 2002, Americans have already paid Saddam Hussein $2.3 billion for oil we need to run our economy and our military.

Since 1970, oil production in the United States has declined, with only a tiny blip up from Alaska's Prudhoe Bay. Many experts agree that U.S. oil production will continue to decline, no matter what we do in terms of drilling.

A comprehensive energy bill with advances in conservation, efficiency and alternative and renewable forms of energy will strengthen America's economy and national security and lessen our dependence upon oil from Saddam Hussein.

HONORING JOSEF D'HEYGERS FOR HIS CONTRIBUTIONS TO MATER DEI HIGH SCHOOL

(Ms. SANCHEZ asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to honor Josef D'Heygers for his contributions to Mater Dei High School in Santa Ana and to our community.

Josef worked as a caretaker for Mater Dei High School for over 40 years, beginning in 1956. He has lived a modest life, living on campus in a trailer filled with crosses and Mater Dei memorabilia.

Josef recently donated his life savings to Mater Dei to assist with the school's plans to expand. His was one of the top donations given to the campaign.

Mater Dei has always been Josef's family. He gave generously because he firmly believes that education keeps teenagers happy and out of trouble, and he wants his gift to offer students what they need for college and for a lifetime of success.

Josef was recently honored by Mater Dei by having the new counseling and classroom building named after him.

I think all of us can learn from Josef's generosity and his dedication to the education of our Nation's children.

SUPPORT BALANCED ENERGY PLAN TO SECURE TERRORIST-FREE FUTURE FOR AMERICA

(Mr. REHBERG asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REHBERG. Mr. Speaker, America is already at war. We are at war against terrorists and those that support evil.

Today we have an important decision to make: Will we continue to finance Saddam Hussein's war machine by buying his oil, or will we support energy independence? I stand here today in support of America and for using America's untapped energy resources.

While our sons and daughters bravely fight terrorism, there are those in this Chamber that would have America continue to import almost 60 percent of our oil from terrorist-sponsoring regimes.

I urge my colleagues to support a balanced energy plan to secure a terrorist-free America for our future.

RESERVATIONS CONCERNING PROPOSED ATTACK ON IRAQ

(Mr. WU asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WU. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my grave reservations concerning this administration's proposed attack on Iraq. If there were evidence of an imminent threat against us or an attack on Iraq's neighbors, I would not hesitate to use force. But every successful American wartime President, Lincoln, Wilson, Roosevelt, Kennedy, presented evidence to the Nation and to the world that war was absolutely necessary, and thereby led a united Nation in purpose and in moral certitude.

Mr. Speaker, I want to quote a President who avoided becoming a wartime President. In averting a war with France almost 2 centuries ago, John Adams wrote to his wife, Abigail: "Great is the guilt of an unnecessary war."

If there is evidence of imminent necessity, I ask the administration to present it now. We owe it to ourselves, to the world, and to posterity.

GETTING THE AMERICAN ECONOMY ON TRACK

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to help get our economy going again, to get people investing again and to strengthen America's retirement.

My bill will help to boost stock market performance by providing a real incentive for investors to keep their hard-earned money in the market. This bill will achieve that goal by ending the double taxation of dividends.

Currently dividend income is taxed twice, first as corporate income and again as personal income. This tax policy diminishes the value to shareholders of dividend-paying stocks.

By treating dividend payments differently from interest, we are providing a disincentive for corporations to return earnings to shareholders. Not surprisingly, dividend payments have declined in recent years.

Encouraging the regular payment of dividends by ending their double taxation will attract new investors and help to stop the slide of the stock market.

TIME TO END INTEREST-FREE LOANS TO THE GOVERNMENT

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I am here today to call for an end to huge interest-free loans to the government. That is why I have a plan that would fix a portion of the alternative minimum tax problem for those who purchased incentive stock options from their employer. H.R. 5398 would allow taxpayers to apply their prepaid ISO taxes under AMT against up to half of their regular income tax liability.

Mr. Speaker, many taxpayers have prepaid thousands of dollars of taxes with little ability to use those accumulated credits. In essence, people are floating the government a huge interest-free loan. It is just plain wrong, and it must stop.

My bill fixes that so families who have put second mortgages on their homes, cashed out retirement savings, sold assets, and struggled to work out payment plans with the IRS can get their money back and get on with their lives. It is the least we can do for America.

TIME TO PASS PENSION PROTECTION LEGISLATION

(Mr. BOOZMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BOOZMAN. Mr. Speaker, it has been over 5 months since we passed H.R. 3762, the Pension Reform Security Act. This issue is still a concern to the third district of Arkansas, yet Congress has not completed work on the legislation that will protect my constituents' pensions.

The bill we passed back in April evens out the playing field between senior level executives and the men and women of their workforce. This bill relaxes diversification rules for rank and file workers, enhances worker access to quality investment, and provides a number of much-needed retirement security reforms.

Mr. Speaker, pension reform and protection are critical to restoring investor confidence in our faltering marketplace, and the completion of this bill is critical to the agenda of the 107th Congress. I encourage my colleagues in the House to reaffirm our commitment to pension protection by voting for House Resolution 540 today.

AMERICANS SHOULD PRAY FOR PEACE

(Mr. DOGGETT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOGGETT. Mr. Speaker, tonight at 6 o'clock at Freedom Plaza at 13th and Pennsylvania, a number of area religious leaders will gather in a prayer vigil for peace. This afternoon, several of the victims from 9/11 will be here to affirm that they think peace is the better course, particularly since there has been a total inability of the Administration to connect the terrorist events of 9/11 with Iraq.

I believe that Americans must pray and must petition their elected representatives here in the Congress to be more than a speed bump on the fast track to war in Iraq, a war that will take thousands of lives, a war that will take hundreds of billions of dollars from American taxpayers.

Now is the time to speak out and speak out firmly in favor of the security of our country and our families, and doing it in a constructive and reasonable way, not by launching a war against a despot in Iraq.

HAPPY 75TH BIRTHDAY TO HENRY HILL

(Mr. ISAKSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to acknowledge and celebrate the 75th birthday of Dr. Henry Hill of Cobb County, Georgia. Henry is my friend and my mentor and, most importantly, he was my first successful campaign manager. But I do not rise for myself, I rise for thousands of parents, thousands of children, thousands of teachers.

Henry's life has been dedicated to public education as a principal, as a coach, as a teacher, and as a counselor. Normally on birthdays we give the recipient a gift, but on this birthday, number 75 for Henry, I acknowledge the gift he has given to thousands and thousands of our children.

May God Bless Henry Hill.

PROTECTING AMERICA AGAINST TERRORISTS, THUGS, BULLIES, AND MURDERERS

(Mr. HAYES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in response and in direct opposition to statements that have been recently made. Everyone in this House wants peace; the question is how. Those who say that we and the President have not connected the dots either cannot read or refuse to assess the information that is readily available in both secret and public briefings. We can look to the former weapons inspectors, we can look to the research data behind Prime Minister Blair's speech, and we can look at the research backing up the President of the United States' speech to the U.N.

Mr. Speaker, the evidence is clear. We will protect America against terrorists, against thugs, bullies, and murderers like Saddam Hussein. In visiting Fort Bragg, our soldiers, sailors, airmen, and Marines are ready to do what it takes to protect America and the civilized world.

STAND UP FOR AMERICA'S PENSIONERS

(Mr. TIERNEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I thought we might take a minute this morning to talk about the fact that while our economy struggles and while families across America watch helplessly as their retirement savings dwindle away as a result of corporate greed and mismanagement, while health care costs soar to ever-higher rates, and while prescription drug prices rise at 5 times the rate of inflation, the leadership in this House can still be counted on to protect the interests of corporate moguls and wealthy special interests at the expense of hard-working American families.

A case in point. With the startling news that 401(k) and other defined contribution plans lost $210 billion last year, and IRAs lost $230 billion, the majority in this House still thinks it perfectly all right for companies to provide conflicted investment advice to their employees, advice from analysts who have a stake in the very stocks that they are touting, analysts who receive financial benefits from promoting certain stocks, even if they know they are of questionable value.

Some of us tried to do something about that and correct the inequity when we considered the so-called pension reform bill last spring. My amendment would have provided truly unconflicted advice to investors, and that is the direction we ought to go. The bills that are in front of the House later on today, Mr. Speaker, do not move in that direction, and we need to stand up for the American people whose investments are dwindling and do the right thing.

AMERICA'S INTERESTS SHOULD BE FIRST ON THE FLOOR OF THE HOUSE

(Mr. KINGSTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KINGSTON. Mr. Speaker, now, let us just kind of go back in time. Suppose it is August 2001, and a Member of Congress is speaking to a Rotary Club or something and says, listen, there is a guy out there, a known terrorist named Osama bin Laden. He has a group called al-Qaeda, and they have found sanctuary and training opportunities inside the corrupt Taliban government of Afghanistan. Now, I am telling you here and now, in August 2001, ladies and gentlemen, we need to instruct the President of the United States and instruct the CIA to take him out. We need to work with maybe an international coalition to get rid of this guy.

Now, if a Member of Congress had been saying that 13 months ago, he would have been laughed at, he would have been ridiculed, and he would have been called a warmonger and, yet, how right that statement would have been 13 months ago.

Now, are we not in the same position? We have Saddam Hussein, he hates America, he harbors terrorists, he has been directly and indirectly involved with all kinds of terrorist activity, many against America, all around the globe. Is it not prudent to take the course of action that our President is doing?

Mr. Speaker, this is not time for partisanship or cowering behind whatever boundaries or ideas that one has; this is time to put our best thoughts together and work together as a Nation, as Democrats and Republicans, and bring America's interest first to the floor of this House and get behind the President of the United States.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the Chair will now put the question on the approval of the Journal and then on each motion to suspend the rules on which further proceedings were postponed on Tuesday, September 24, in the order in which that motion was entertained.

Votes will be taken in the following order:

on approving the Journal, de novo;

on H.R. 2982, by the yeas and nays;

and on H. Con. Res. 297, by the yeas and nays.

The Chair will reduce to 5 minutes the time for any electronic vote after the first such vote in this series.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, the pending business is the question de novo of the Speaker's approval of the Journal.

The question is on the Speaker's approval of the Journal of the last day's proceedings.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. MCNULTY. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

This will be a 15-minute vote followed by two 5-minute votes.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 366, nays 48, answered "present" 1, not voting 17, as follows:

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the establishment of a memorial to victims who died as a result of terrorist acts against the United States or its people, at home or abroad.".

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RECOGNIZING HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE OF 100 YEARS OF KOREAN IMMIGRATION TO THE UNITED STATES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The unfinished business is the question of suspending the rules and agreeing to the concurrent resolution, H. Con. Res. 297.

The Clerk read the title of the concurrent resolution.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

ABORTION NON-DISCRIMINATION ACT OF 2002

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 546 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 546

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the bill (H.R. 4691) to prohibit certain abortion-related discrimination in governmental activities. The bill shall be considered as read for amendment. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except: (1) one hour of debate on the bill equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce; and (2) one motion to recommit.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purpose of debate only.

On Tuesday, the Committee on Rules met and granted a closed rule for the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act of 2002. H.R. 4691 strengthens existing law by saying that health care entities should not be forced by the government to provide abortions. It is a very small but very important step in the right direction. It simply protects conscience rights of those organizations who do not want to be involved in abortion.

I urge Members to act promptly to enact the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act, which will address the crisis of conscience rights and begin to eliminate the intolerance, coercion and discrimination against health care participants who do not believe in participating in abortion procedures due to moral or religious beliefs.

In 1996 Congress passed a law that forbids government discrimination against health care entities that refuse to undergo training in the performance of induced abortions, to require or provide such training, to perform such abortions or to provide referrals for such training for such abortions.

However, due to recent judicial misrepresentation, H.R. 4691 is needed to clarify that health care entities include all health care organizations, including hospitals. It is a simple, commonsense and technical change.

I am pleased that in my home State of North Carolina a physician or a nurse does not have to perform abortion if it is against their religious principles. The same applies for hospitals and health care institutions. In fact, 44 other States have similar conscience clauses. So this is not something new and different.

As a cosponsor of this legislation, I am very pleased to see it reach the floor of the House.

I also believe that today a growing number of health care practices, procedures and medications present serious moral concerns for many health care providers. Recent medical and pharmacological developments increasingly put health care entities at the vortex of some of society's controversial moral dilemmas.

Increasingly, there is pressure upon health care providers, both individuals and organizations, to put aside personal moral beliefs in order to facilitate convenient access to new drugs, procedures and technologies. In the ordinary course of professional life, without any additional pressures, these dilemmas arise often enough to create crisis for tens of thousands of health care entities.

However, in addition to these dilemmas, there are increasing pressures upon health care participants to facilitate or provide products or services which violate their own conscience. Advocates of particular procedures and programs, particularly major promoters of abortion, are systematically singling out health care providers and entities to squeeze and compel them to abandon their moral values as the price to pay to remain in the profession or in the market.

Mr. Speaker, health care providers want this bill in overwhelming numbers, believing in their hearts that they too have a right to choose, a right to choose not to be involved in destroying life. To that end, I urge my colleagues to support the rule and the underlying bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman from North Carolina (Mrs. MYRICK) for yielding me the customary 30 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, it has been a mere 6 weeks since the leadership lobbed on to the House floor a bill targeting women and their reproductive health care. Be assured that the election season is upon us, and in the face of a crumbling stock market and exploding deficits and uncertain war on terrorism at home and calls for new war in Iraq, of this we can be sure: Congress will use the floor of the House of Representatives to push propaganda restricting a woman's ability to make her own decisions rather than deal with the overriding issues at hand.

□ 1115

Mr. Speaker, Congress does not have the right or the expertise to make these decisions for the American people. The last time Members were facing a life-or-death decision, or their constituents were facing a life-or-death situation, who would they want with them in the emergency room? Did they want their physician, their spiritual adviser, family members, or would that patient say wait until a Member of Congress gets here because Congress will have the last word on this issue? I am sure that the American public would give us a resounding no. We are basically practicing medicine without a license.

Direct mail pieces distorting the issue are already being printed and will hit the streets as soon as the vote is completed. This vote is pure politics. This measure is cynical and unconstitutional. Moreover, everyone in the Senate knows that the Senate will not touch it.

In the meantime, the real work of the Congress as mandated by the Constitution goes undone. Our most fundamental duty of funding the Nation's priority has ground to a halt. With the fiscal year ending in less than a week, the President has yet to sign a single appropriations bill. The press reports indicate that the majority leadership has under consideration a plan to simply quit work and go home and come back and try again next year, using a long-term continuing resolution to disguise that fact that the people's House has ceased to perform anything but election-year gimmicks at taxpayers' expense.

It is almost superfluous to note that this is a closed rule. For those following the deliberations of this body on controversial matters, it should come as no surprise. The majority has chosen to shut out meaningful debate. Under this closed rule, no amendment will be allowed. For a bill that impacts so fundamentally on the life of so many, this is unconscionable.

For those school children who may be visiting this Chamber today, I wanted to offer a quick history lesson. Silence was not always the case here. Free-flowing debate used to be the norm. The Chamber used to team with ideas and with voices of passion from all regions of the country. Today these voices are shut out. My colleagues, the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE), the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), and the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. GREENWOOD), attempted to have an amendment made in order in the Committee on Rules to prevent the most egregious effects of the underlying bill taking effect. Their efforts were struck down almost immediately along a party-line vote. It is my hope that someday true debate will return to this Chamber and the voices of our constituents will not be silenced.

But today, Mr. Speaker, instead of debate, we will have an up-and-down vote on a bill that will radically expand existing law. This legislation would essentially allow any health care entity, including hospitals, health insurance companies, or HMOs, to exempt themselves from current Federal, State and local laws that assure women have access to reproductive services. I want to make the point here that that says that the Hyde amendment, which was passed by Congress which allows a person who has been a victim of rape or incest to have an abortion, will be overridden by this bill. It says that any law or regulation by a State or the Federal Government can be overridden.

Now, any law or regulation that covers any kind of coverage will be considered discriminatory against a health care entity that does not want to comply, for any reason at all, not merely religious, and could not be enforced. Remember, the religious exemption has been in legislation for years. That is not what we are doing today. The penalty for any State or local government which discriminates is the loss of all, all Federal financial assistance. At a time when hospitals and local governments are hanging on by a thread, such a loss of Federal funds would be devastating.

H.R. 4691 has been brought to the floor without any committee consideration and over the strong objections of the moderate Members of the majority party. Moreover, for a party that prides itself on attention to States' rights, it is ironic that this legislation will override the progress of States that have worked to ensure that women not only have access to reproductive services, but also the right to basic information.

This bill reinstates the gag rule. Many in this body may not realize it, but the Federal Government does not pay for abortion services. As I mentioned before, the Hyde amendment to the Medicaid program stipulates that Medicaid patients must have access to these procedures only in cases of rape, incest or when the pregnancy endangers a woman's life. That would be gone. This bill before us overrides even that most narrow of exceptions. Moreover, States like mine, who use their own Medicaid funds to cover abortion services beyond those narrow circumstances if they wish, and in fact, 21 States do so, this bill would preclude these States from enforcing their own laws and constitutional decisions in the area of reproductive services for low-income women.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is not limited to reproductive services themselves. Under the bill, States would be prohibited from requiring health care entities participating in the Medicaid programs to provide referrals for reproductive services. It would prohibit States from ensuring that patients have all of the information they need to make an informed choice about themselves, the gag rule again.

Moreover, this bill is a direct assault on the doctor-patient relationship. Under this legislation, the administrative hospitals or HMOs could gag the doctors who work under them from discussing basic information about abortion services with their patients. We restrict no other professionals from giving the best of their advice to people who seek it.

This law provides no guidelines for why these administrators may be gagging physicians from providing or even discussing reproductive services. It will say simply to save the HMO more money. The legislation is a gross expansion of the powers of the managed-care entities to severely limit the options available to the patients that they supposedly serve. The legislation would also undermine a State's ability to set health care licensing and certification standards. Imagine that, we would be setting certification standards and licensing for them from here as well.

In deciding whether to approve a hospital merger, for example, a State could not consider whether a newly merged hospital system would diminish a community's access to full reproductive health services. This would tie the hands of States like New Jersey that are trying to ensure that entire communities are not completely without any qualified abortion providers.

In fact, supporters of the bill have stated that this is their intent. The measure is opposed by numerous groups, including the National Council of Jewish Women, Catholics for Free Choice, the American Association of University Women, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, the Center for Reproductive Law and Policy, National Organization of Women, the National Partnership for Women and Families, People for the American Way, and the Planned Parenthood Federation of America, and certainly me.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. HAYES).

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in strong support of the rule and the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act. The gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) strayed a bit from the subject, and I feel the necessity to respond.

As far as the work of the House is concerned, the House is doing its work. Under article 1, section 7, clause 2, the House has passed a budget and many other important pieces of legislation. As required by law, we have done our work. The Senate has not passed a budget.

More importantly, to say that protection of human life is not significant legislation is as sadly wrong as it possibly can be. H.R. 4691 is simply a clarification of current law. This existing nondiscrimination statute that Congress overwhelmingly approved and President Clinton signed into law in 1996 protects health care entities from being forced by the government to perform abortions. Because of judicial misinterpretation, H.R. 4691 is needed to clarify that health care entities include all health care organizations, including hospitals.

In recent years, there has been a growing nationwide effort to attack the conscience rights of Catholic and other private health care providers. Alaska courts have assumed they have the authority to force private hospitals to provide abortions as a condition for receiving Federal funds or for full participation in the health care system. It is imperative that we clarify the protections contained in current law to ensure that no hospital is forced to perform abortions against its will. I support the rule and the underlying bill.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Washington (Mr. MCDERMOTT).

Mr. MCDERMOTT. Mr. Speaker, I cannot help thinking that we are moving back to the 16th century. This is the most far-reaching assault on women that I have ever seen in this House. I want to put a human face on this. In 1963, I was an intern at the Buffalo General Hospital. I dealt with two poor women who had back-alley abortions. One had eight children, one had six. They were done with coat hangers, and both those women died. I still see their faces.

At the same time that was going on in Buffalo at the place I now live, Seattle, women could go down to a travel agency, buy a ticket to Japan, have a day's shopping and an abortion, and come home. Now, that is the circumstance in 1961, 1962, 1963 in this country.

For us to be moving back in this direction, overriding Roe v. Wade, and the Hyde amendment, is simply a step back into the dark ages and it is absolutely wrong. This is not a women's issue; this is a human issue. Those 14 children in Buffalo who grew up without their mothers because their mothers could not have full reproductive services in a decent hospital in a major city in the United States are what Members are saying is all right for all of the children of this country.

Leave no children behind, my President has said. Well, this is guaranteed to leave children behind if we step back this far into the past. I urge Members to vote against this rule.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. RYUN).

Mr. RYUN of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule, H.R. 4691. Today we have the opportunity to support freedom of conscience for those in our health care system and who have invested their lives in caring for their fellow Americans. Forty-six States protect hospitals and health care professionals who choose not to participate in abortions; and even though there is existing law, Federal law, intended to protect individuals and entities from being forced to participate in an abortion, clarification is still needed, and that is what we are doing today.

Some hospitals and doctors are being forced to go against their conscience and provide abortion services. In spite of existing law, this coercion still exists. For example, the National Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League has a project in Maryland that aims to require every Maryland hospital to provide abortion services.

H.R. 4691 will guarantee that hospitals, insurance companies, and health care professionals will not be forced to take part in a procedure that they deem morally wrong and disagree with.

Whether one supports a right to life or a right to abortion, participating in or paying for abortion should not be forced upon anyone. I urge Members to stand with me in supporting this rule and our constituents' freedom of conscience.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY).

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to H.R. 4691. It is a misguided measure that has dangerous implications for women's reproductive health and for our health care system as a whole.

Of course, elections are near, so this debate might be advanced because of a right wing, anti-choice agenda. We have heard and it has been made quite clear that their political schemes are worth sacrificing the health of American women. This bill robs women of their right to get comprehensive information about their medical and legal options, and this bill will leave health care providers at the whim of the anti-choice movement.

The current state of our health system is obviously weakening day by day. Our constituents are experiencing increased premiums or they are being dropped by their plans altogether, and now the right wing of this Congress is prepared to tell our constituents that their right to make an informed decision is being taken away.

Mr. Speaker, rather than putting patient access to care in further jeopardy, why are we not working to improve access to quality health care? This bill also is a slap in the face to State and local governments that have implemented policies that put a woman's health ahead of bad politics.

We cannot fall for the outrageous antics of the anti-choice community. We cannot let them twist another health care issue into a political issue. That is why I implore my colleagues, my colleagues on both sides of the aisle, vote against this extremely harmful measure and vote against this rule.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Pennsylvania (Ms. HART).

Ms. HART. Mr. Speaker, for many individuals, opposition to abortion is not just a matter of choice but it has been a matter of conscience and faith. Many individuals so moved to oppose abortion are the health care providers who at one time under Federal law found themselves in the difficult position of objecting to the procedure but being forced to perform it. Fortunately in 1996 Congress recognized that those who choose to oppose abortions should not be forced to administer the procedure and passed legislation protecting those, as they called them, health care entities from being forced by the government to perform those abortions.

Since the passage of that law, though, those who do not want to respect the right of individuals to conscientiously object to performing this procedure and want to ignore the will of Congress have fought this provision nationwide. The attack has been successful in cases such as in Alaska where courts have decided that they can force private hospitals to provide abortions as a condition of fully participating in their health care system. The ignorance of the faith and conscientious objection of American health care professionals and organizations is unacceptable.

That is why I support this legislation. It simply clarifies language in the law so that all health care entities, including Catholic hospitals and individual health care professionals other than physicians, are covered and can freely object to performing abortions on the basis of their conscientious decision.

Opponents of the bill have argued that this legislation will block access to emergency care for poor women or that it will interfere with a State's right to enforce abortion laws. None of this is true. The bill simply protects the conscientious objection of health care providers who oppose abortion.

Mr. Speaker, this is a simple and very direct bill. It does not expand or change any rights of women. What it does is it allows for the free exercise of a conscientious objection of a health care provider.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds to respond to the previous speaker. It does indeed change women's rights. It puts a gag rule on women, and the religious exemption that she talks about clarifying is already in legislation. What this does is drive women back to back alleys.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY).

Ms. SCHAKOWSKY. I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to H.R. 4691 and in opposition to the rule that we are considering right now because we should not be considering this legislation at all. Despite the wishes of the bill's promoters, our United States Constitution does in fact guarantee American women the right to choose an abortion. And while this bill does not directly overturn Roe v. Wade, it might as well for many women do that since it will make access to abortion impossible for them. To talk about this as a technical change is simply cynical. This is one of the most dangerous attempts to restrict a woman's right to choose, including her right to information and services regarding her reproductive health.

H.R. 4691 would allow an HMO or a health insurance company to decide for any reason whatsoever that it will no longer pay for, provide information or even make referrals for abortion services even if the woman's life is endangered or she is a victim of rape or incest. Under this bill, it would be impossible for a State to ensure that women who are victims of rape or incest or whose life is threatened would have access to abortions. In this world today, there are decreasing options for everyone in choosing health insurance companies or HMOs.

So are we going to leave it, then, to an employer to decide whether or not a woman would have a right to choose in essence because that HMO would deny them access to the abortion? And in rural areas where there may be only one option for a woman to go, she is denied that opportunity to have her full health services available to her.

What this bill really does is allow any health care entity to ignore all Federal, State and local laws pertaining to abortion services, information and referrals. It is not a conscience clause as some would like to call it, as if HMOs have a conscience. In fact, there are no Federal laws that currently exist that require any individuals or hospitals to provide abortions. But this bill would restrict a doctor's rights; that is, his right if he believes in his medical judgment or in his conscience that it is his responsibility to provide those services, he could not do that. So this does limit the right of doctors not to be forced to perform it but to be forced not to perform abortions.

Women in this country need to be able to trust that when they go to a doctor with a problem or a condition that they will be given all information necessary to make informed decisions. But this bill would gag doctors. Informed consent as a minimum is a valued and expected component of our health care system. So why do we think that when it comes to women's health it is okay to throw even this concept out the window?

This is unacceptable. I urge a "no" vote.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. AKIN).

Mr. AKIN. Mr. Speaker, I think those of us that have served in public office at all know that when you come to the abortion question, there are two very highly charged and two different views on this subject. Some people think that abortion should be legal and that it is a matter of a human right and somebody's choice. Other people think that abortion is wrong and it is a form of murder. There are people in our country and in each of our districts that hold both of these views with a great deal of tenacity.

But the question before us today is really not the question of abortion. We are not going to address this underlying issue. What we are talking about instead, the question is as to whether we protect various health care organizations or individuals, whether we want to protect their right to have a choice, to even have an opinion on the subject.

What is going on here is that the abortion agenda is not really content with choice. The only choice that they are content with is that everybody has to agree with them and that we are going to compel someone else to that choice. It is always understood, I think, by most reasonable people that one person's rights stop where another person's rights start. But that is not the case here. Instead, the right of some health care organization to have an opinion on this subject is going to be hammered by the big fist of government. That is not reasonable.

All we are saying is that the person that has to provide the service needs to have a choice as well. One person's right stops where another's right starts.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I want to say, there is already conscience exemptions and everybody knows that. That is not why we are here today. We are really here today to turn back the clock. Without any doubt, a woman who has the opportunity even to understand what her rights are and what her options are, this is an appalling thing that we are doing. This is not an ordinary law we are talking about here. This is life and death. A woman who has come into a hospital raped, scared to death, does not know what to do, needs somebody to talk to, may have the unlucky option of coming across a doctor who says his conscience forbids him from discussing it with her, comforting her or giving her any idea that she has options.

But since this House is all politics all the time in this Chamber, I want to give you some statistics that I think might be interesting on a political issue. The vast majority of Americans oppose allowing institutional health care providers to deny service on the basis of moral or religious objections. Seventy-six percent of the public opposes giving hospitals an exemption allowing them to refuse to provide medical services to which they object on religious grounds. Eighty-nine percent of the public opposes allowing insurance companies to refuse to pay for medical services to which the insurance company objects on religious grounds. Seventy-nine percent of the public finds convincing the statement that religiously affiliated hospitals should not be allowed to force their religious beliefs on other people. And frankly, I expect that nigh 100 percent of the people in the United States do not believe that Congress should impose its religious beliefs on them.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following material for the RECORD:

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION,
WASHINGTON NATIONAL OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 24, 2002.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE: The ACLU urges you to vote against H.R. 4961, the so-called "Abortion Non-Discrimination Act" when it is considered on the House floor tomorrow. Drafted by the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops and sponsored by Representatives DICK ARMEY (R-TX), JOSEPH PITTS (R-PA), and MICHAEL BILIRAKIS (R-FL), H.R. 4691 would allow a broad range of health care entities to refuse to comply with a wide array of federal, state, and local requirements to provide abortion services or information about those services.

Refusal clauses such as H.R. 4691 permit a person or entity to refuse to provide reproductive health services. The ACLU believes that such clauses should be tested against two factors: (1) the extent to which the clause protects religious refusals that place burdens on people who do not share the beliefs that motivate the refusal (by "burdens," we mean obstacles to health care and other critical personal interests, but not the mere exposure of third parties to religious practices or the tax or other financial burdens that may result from permitting certain exemptions); and (2) the extent to which the clause protects institutions engaged primarily in religious worship or instruction, or instead exempts institutions engaged in a secular pursuit in the public sphere. Although this test is not compelled by any legal ruling, the ACLU believes that it strikes the appropriate balance between reproductive rights and religious freedom. H.R. 4691 fails this test because its burdens would fall primarily on those who do not share the beliefs that motivate the refusal and because it protects institutions engaged in the public and secular provision of health care. Because H.R. 4691 amounts to a broad noncompliance permit for religious entities that employ and serve people of all faiths, that perform a variety of public functions, and that accept public financial support, the ACLU strongly opposes this bill.

H.R. 4691 radically alters existing law by providing broad license for all manner of health care entities—from hospitals to insurance companies to HMOs—to avoid basic legal requirements imposed by all levels of government. The bill prohibits a governmental entity from "discriminating"—that is, treating a health care entity differently—on the basis of the entity's refusal to perform, refer, train, cover, or pay for abortions. But merely enforcing federal, state, and local laws designed to ensure access to abortion services, or to information about those services, could constitute "discrimination" against entities that object to those laws. This bill could thus deny women access to critical information about their health care options, interfere with the delivery of abortion services to poor women in medical emergencies, and impede states' ability to enforce their own laws on abortion.

Would compromise the ability of Title X clients to obtain information critical to their health. Title X, which provides federal funds for contraceptive services for low-income individuals, requires that grantees provide a referral to a qualified abortion provider upon request as part of non-directive options counseling. H.R. 4691 would prohibit the federal government from enforcing this regulation because it could be deemed "discriminatory" to deny Title X grants to providers that refuse to make abortion referrals. The bill could thus undermine federal standards and compromise the health of low-income pregnant women by denying them critical information;

Would interfere with the delivery of abortion services to poor women in dire emergencies. H.R. 4691 would impede compliance with the Hyde Amendment, which mandates Medicaid coverage of abortions in cases of rape, incest, or where the pregnancy endangers a woman's life. Requiring Medicaid managed care organizations to provide such coverage, or to provide information concerning such coverage, could constitute "discrimination" against those entities that refuse to provide or refer patients elsewhere for these services;

Would interfere with states' ability to enforce their own laws on abortion. H.R. 4691 could prevent those states that cover medically necessary abortions beyond those mandated by the Hyde Amendment (whether as a result of state constitutional rulings or by virtue of state laws) from effectuating that coverage by contracting only with Medicaid managed care organizations that agree to provide or refer patients elsewhere for abortion services. (More than fifteen states require such coverage.) The provision would interfere with these states' ability to enforce their own laws and to manage and ensure delivery of mandated services within their own Medicaid programs;

Would disrupt the enforcement of state health care regulations. H.R. 4691 would thwart the enforcement of state and local laws that require entities certified or licensed by the state to address the full range of health care needs in the communities they serve. A state might be prevented, for example, from denying a "certificate of need" (a state-issued document that is similar to a permit) to a newly merged hospital that refused to provide even lifesaving abortions and thus left pregnant women in the community without help in medical emergencies. (Mergers between religiously affiliated hosiptals and secular hospitals often raise this issue because some religious hospitals insist that the newly merged entity apply religious doctrine in the provision of health services.);

Could violate basic principles of federalism. H.R. 4691 might interfere with the enforcement of rulings by those state courts that have concluded that their state constitutions require broader protection for reproductive freedom than the federal Constitution provides. For example, proponents claim that the bill would overrule Valley Hospital v. Mat-su Coalition for Choice, 948 P.2d 963 (Alaska 1997), in which the Alaska Supreme Court concluded that the Alaska Constitution requires that quasi-public hospitals provide abortion services. If interpreted as its proponents urge, this bill would abrogate this state constitutional decision because it would prohibit "discrimination" against quasi-public entities for their refusal to provide or refer for abortions. It would thus strip states of autonomy and violate basic principles of federalism;

Could interfere with the enforcement of certain state trust laws. Some state laws prevent health facilities established as charitable trusts from making significant changes in their charitable purposes. For example, charitable trust laws may prohibit a hospital founded specifically to serve a broad segment of the community from eliminating the provision of reproductive health services. At least one state has enforced its charitable trust law against a hospital that sought to convert from a community facility to a religiously controlled facility that provided more limited reproductive health services. Proponents of H.R. 4691 argue that such a state would be deemed to have impermissibly "discriminated" against the hospital under the bill; and

Could immunize a health care entity's refusal to provide emergency contraception, even to victims of rape. Because it does not define the term "abortion," H.R. 4691 could permit health care entities to refuse to provide emergency contraception ("EC"), even to victims of rape. Although EC is merely a high dose of ordinary birth control pills and does not interrupt an established pregnancy, some religiously affiliated providers define EC as an "abortifacient." They could use this bill to attempt to shield themselves from repercussions for refusing to comply with state laws that require hospitals to provide EC (or referrals for EC) to rape survivors in their emergency rooms.

Where the Public Stands: The vast majority of Americans oppose allowing institutional health care providers to deny services on the basis of moral or religious objections:

76% of the public opposes giving hospitals an exemption allowing them to refuse to provide medical services to which they object on religious grounds.

89% of the public opposes allowing insurance companies to refuse to pay for medical services to which the insurance company objects on religious grounds.

79% of the public finds convincing the statement that "[r]eligiously affiliated hospitals should not be allowed to force their religious beliefs on other people."

For all of these reasons, the ACLU urges you to oppose H.R. 4691.

Sincerely,

LAURA W. MURPHY,
Director.
GREGORY T. NOJEIM,
Associate Director and Chief Legislative Counsel.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut (Mrs. JOHNSON).

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, I know this is a difficult issue for everybody and I regret to have to rise in strong opposition to this rule and to encourage the Republicans and Democrats, pro-life and pro-choice, to oppose this rule.

I do not know how many of you know women in America who use prescription contraceptives to plan their families, to manage their reproductive capability, but in my experience of the women who are of childbearing age, 99 percent, 95 percent, a very large percent of women in America use prescription contraceptives and many States require that any health plan offering prescription drugs include prescription contraceptives in order to be a non-discriminatory prescription drug plan.

This bill for the first time explicitly says that any HMO CEO, who personally defines prescription contraceptives as an abortifacient, can alter their plan to deny women the right to coverage under their prescription drug plan of prescription contraceptives.

Ladies and gentlemen, that is wrong. Never have we given, and here it is right in the bill, a provider sponsored organization, (that is a PSO), a health maintenance organization, (that is an HMO), a health insurance plan the power to deny legal benefits. Health insurance plans and the standards they must abide by are set by State law. This is a massive override of State law that regulates health insurance plans and benefits.

I have personally stood on this floor and voted against some very popular health mandates that have frankly come back to haunt me politically because the Federal Government should not be mandating health benefits on States and State plans. This is doing exactly that and it is giving this power arbitrarily to an individual HMO CEO to override State law. We have never done that. We have never stood on this House floor and allowed individuals to say in conscience, when it might well be not in conscience but in cost, the right to make such decisions in opposition to State law! Are we going to allow the conscience clause now to be polluted as an economic instrument?

The protection in conscience is clear. Forty-five States have laws protecting doctors, nurses, all health care professionals, so they do not have to provide sterilization, abortion, or any procedure that in conscience they do not agree with. Furthermore, Catholic hospitals do not have to provide facilities. No institution that in conscience does not agree has to provide services or facilities. They not only do not have to do it if there are doctors or nurses that do not agree, but the institution is protected. All this does is say CEOs are protected as well.

Did you vote for a patients' bill of rights? I do not care whether it was the Democrat's Patients' Bill of Rights or the Republican's Patients' Bill of Rights, the whole goal of that was to allow patients and doctors to make decisions about health plans and not HMO CEOs,

I urge you to vote down this rule. We need a much greater discussion than to bring this up in the waning days of a session that has not passed its appropriation bills.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

I thank the gentlewoman from Connecticut for her very thoughtful remarks. One point she made that I think is terribly important is that we are turning religious exemption, moral thoughts and moral attitudes into an economic issue by saying we simply will not do this. But, moreover, let me make the point that we made earlier when we talked, that any hospital that flies in the face of this legislation will be restricted of all Federal aid, all of it.

And if the Members' hospitals are like mine, and I see no reason why they would not be, this would be devastating to them and hospitals would have to close all over the country.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Colorado (Ms. DEGETTE).

Ms. DEGETTE. Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate some of the points that have been made but most importantly the fact that we should defeat this rule. This rule is a closed rule. It did not allow a very simple amendment which would have essentially said that doctors will not be gagged from telling their patients what is the best medical information for those patients. Why on earth with an issue like this that was never even taken through committee, and I know that because I sit on the committee of jurisdiction, would we then bring a closed rule to the floor with a bill as outrageous and sweeping as this bill? I urge a "no" vote on the rule. And when we look at the consequences of passing the bill, even if the rule did pass, even if the doctors would be gagged, this bill is such an expansion of law that we cannot pass legislation that will hurt patients so badly.

This legislation is the biggest gag rule we have ever seen. It will not protect Catholic hospitals from providing abortions or even referrals to most people. They are already exempt under current law.

The bill would allow any hospital, any health insurance, any clinic, any HMO to deny services, coverage, or even referrals for abortions for any reason whatsoever. Proponents of this bill will say the purpose is to ensure that hospitals with religious affiliations do not provide services that conflict with their values. This is simply not true. First of all, they do not have to right now. Secondly, there is nothing in this bill about opting out of services or information due to religious values. In fact, there is nothing in this bill about religion at all. Anti-choice lawmakers are trying once again to back-door a bill that restricts women's reproductive choices, and this time they are hiding behind the Vatican to do it.

Let me say it again. Catholic hospitals do not have to provide abortion services under current law, and individual providers at any health care facility can opt out of providing abortions by invoking a conscience clause. This is current law.

Let me tell my colleagues what most health care entities do have to do. They have to give women information about their options. A law preventing them from doing so is a gag rule, plain and simple. And the majority of people in this country want their full medical options and are fiercely opposed to gag rules.

Let me tell my colleagues what current laws that this bill would override. The Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act passed in 1986 requires that if a pregnant woman who comes to an emergency room is dying, is dying, due to the complications of the pregnancy, they have to try to save her life. If an abortion is deemed an immediate lifesaving measure, then they do have to provide one. This bill would overturn that.

So if you think it is acceptable for pregnant women to bleed to death in emergency rooms because some hospitals have a policy of no abortion even under the circumstances of the life of the mother or rape or incest, vote for this bill.

Today if a Medicaid patient comes to an emergency room after being raped and is found to be pregnant as a result of the rape, that hospital is at least obligated to give her a referral if she asks for one. This bill would overturn that. This bill would let a hospital say, I am sorry, you were raped, you want an abortion, but we cannot give you any information about that.

So if you want victims of rape or incest to be ignorant of their options, vote for this bill. If you want HMOs to have more power over what reproductive services they will pay for, vote for this bill. If you want to tell every city, State, and locality that we know better than they do how to provide reproductive health for their citizens, vote for this bill. But if you do not believe in gag rules, if you believe women deserve access to information, if you believe in States' rights, if you believe the women of this country have the right to make their own decisions about their health care, vote against this bill and, importantly, vote against the rule.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, it has been fascinating to listen to the debate on the other side on this bill. This issue began in 1996 when some of the residency training programs were moving in a direction to require that to be certified and eligible to obtain one's license and specialty, such as OB/GYN, one could be forced to receive training in performing abortions. The Congress has a long-established track record of supporting the rights of conscience on this very, very controversial issue. There are many, many Americans, including many physicians, who feel as I do that abortion is morally wrong, that it is killing the unborn, and that nobody should be forced to learn how to do an abortion if they do not want to do it, and, importantly, no health care entity should be forced to perform abortions.

The original statute that was enacted over the signature of Bill Clinton was language that was actually put forward in the Senate by Senators Coates and Snowe. I will point out that she is pro-choice, and she stated at the time that she wanted to protect the rights of conscience, that people who feel strongly that abortion is killing should not be forced to have to do it. Now, that statute had some language in it that I thought was sufficiently broad. It says health care entities, and I thought a hospital was a health care entity. But the people on the left who are trying to advance the abortion agenda have managed to get courts to interpret that hospitals are not health care entities and that being that they receive Federal dollars and other State dollars, they could, and in the State of Alaska they have done this, be interpreted to be required to perform abortions.

If my colleagues do not think the left is trying to advance their agenda, I have this here in my hand. They have since taken this off their Web site. This is Maryland NARAL. It says: "For these reasons Maryland NARAL is launching the Hospital Provider Project. The goal of the Hospital Provider Project is to increase access to abortion services by requiring Maryland hospitals to provide abortion and other reproductive health care." So that is really what this debate is about. They have found a loophole in the Federal law and they are trying to drive a truck through it. Eighty-five percent of hospitals in America today avoid this issue by not providing abortion services and a pro-abortion crowd of the court wants to drag them into court and interpret a statute which we thought protected the right of conscience in such a way that it would force them to have to provide this.

I want to touch on two things that people keep bringing up. Number one, this is going to interfere with all the Federal dollars. I do not know what else to say, other than that is a total misinterpretation of the statute. The interpretation that we have received is that, and these are decisions that have come out of the administration, that it will not interfere.

The other thing I want to comment on is this business about contraception. Contraception is not defined by the FDA as abortion. The morning-after pill is not defined by the FDA as abortion. It is defined as contraception. It is something different. So to interpret this statute to claim that it is going to prohibit access is to take essentially a religious entity's doctrine and put that into the statute, and it is just not there. It is not in the language.

So I know people can disagree on interpretations of law. When I look at this law and the legal scholars that I have had analyze it, they assert that that is a falsehood.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LAHOOD). Members are reminded to refrain from improper references to the other body, including characterizations of positions of the Senate or individual Senators.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

(Mr. SOUDER asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, as we heard earlier, this is an issue that deeply divides our country and us individually. I am passionately pro-life, and I believe it is a shame on America to watch these young kids get killed. But that is not what this bill is about.

This bill is about whether people who share my view about abortion have the right to practice their conscience in America and what are we doing to trample religious rights in America, of people who voluntarily join a health plan that shares their moral and religious beliefs.

Religious institutions, particularly the Catholic Church in this country, founded hospitals to care for the poor and to practice the saving of life. To be able in this country to force them to fund, provide abortion counseling or other things are anathema to their religious beliefs and is wrong.

The bill that my former employer, former Senator Coats, passed in the Senate, intended to address this conscience clause.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Will the gentleman suspend.

The Chair would remind Members to refrain from improper references to the other body, including characterizations of Senate actions.

Mr. SOUDER. As a former staff member, I think I have some flexibility for him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind all Members that we do have rules in the House, and the Chair would ask Members to abide by the rules.

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, the question in Alaska overruled what was, in my opinion, at least, what my former employer intended to say, that the Alaska Supreme Court struck down the conscience clauses applied to the hospital, holding that there was no compelling State interest in the conscience rights of the hospital.

Now, if compelling State interests overrules a Federal law that is based on religious freedoms based on our Constitution and laws that are passed, we are in deep trouble.

You can see by the intent that my friend, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON), just referred to of the Maryland national abortion rights group, their goal is to force those of us who deeply feel that abortion is murder to be able to not have our own plans for healthcare, to not fund our own hospital systems, to not have any alternative but to fund what we view as one of the fundamental evils in the United States.

We can continue to fight abortion in this House and we will continue to fight about it, but those of us who deeply hold that this is a fundamental life should not be forced to fund in any way or participate in plans that require us to lay out dollars that require those of us who share that faith to practice what we believe is murder.

Furthermore, I was deeply offended by the line that said we are trying to hide behind the Vatican. The Council of Catholic Bishops, their pro-life activities have spoken out on this, and there should not be cheap shots at the Catholic Church or those of us who share many deeply held religious views based on those views.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to the previous speaker who brought up the Alaska decision, because the Alaska Supreme Court concluded that the Alaska State Constitution requires that quasi-public hospitals provide abortion services.

Anti-choice forces use this decision to claim that private religious hospitals will be forced to perform abortions against their will. In fact, Valley Hospital is a non-religious institution with deep ties to the State and local government. It was built on land donated by the city using $10.7 million in State funds.

Perhaps most importantly, the hospital had been granted a monopoly by the State to operate in the Ma-Su Valley, effectively insulating it from competition in a wide geographic area.

Based on the significant ties to the State, the Alaska courts ruled the hospital was effectively public and that the Alaska State Constitution therefore prohibited the hospital from banning abortions.

This bill, if passed, would violate those basic principles of Federalism by abrogating this State court ruling.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from Virginia (Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS).

Mrs. JO ANN DAVIS of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak in support of the rule on H.R. 4691. This legislation does not give new rights, nor does it take away any. Rather, it is just a clarification of the current law.

As we previously heard from other speakers, in 1996, Congress overwhelmingly, and I repeat, overwhelmingly, approved the existing nondiscrimination statute that protects healthcare entities from being forced by the government to perform abortions. Only because of judicial misinterpretation are we here today to clarify that healthcare entities include all healthcare organizations, including hospitals.

I would like to note what is at stake here, and that is the freedom to abstain from performing an act that one considers to be morally and ethically wrong.

Catholic hospitals, which are particular targets, have had a long history of locating themselves in impoverished areas where not many others are willing to go. They do this as part of their ministry and yet, there is a movement to shut down these hospitals because they refuse to perform abortions. This is not only ridiculous, but it is callous to all of the people who will suffer without the services that these hospitals provide.

Mr. Speaker, we must stop infringing upon the rights of hospitals, hospital workers, and the patients that they serve. I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on the rule and to vote "yes" on the final passage of H.R. 4691.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

Anybody who votes for this rule because they think that they are preserving religious exemptions is exactly wrong. Religious exemptions are already in law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, to their everlasting credit, 86 percent of hospitals in America do not do abortions. Why? Because they are all about saving life, nurturing, and healing. Pregnancy is not a disease; the unborn child is not a wart or tumor to be killed. Chemical poisoning, literal dismemberment, abortions, are violence against children.

This is all about protecting the right of conscience. NARAL let the cat out of the bag on one of their web sites. They said, Maryland NARAL is launching this hospital provider project to increase access to abortion services by requiring Maryland hospitals to provide abortion. They want to compel hospitals of conscience to do abortions—it's that simple.

Not all of the hospitals are religious. There are people who are not religious who have deep, moral convictions, and they believe that abortion takes the life of a baby. We ought to be nurturing. We should not compel our places of healing to become killing fields.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) has expired.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

In one of those 85 percent of the hospitals that perform no abortions, if a woman should walk in bleeding, dying from a botched abortion, what would they do?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, if the gentlewoman will yield, they would do everything to help that woman survive and, in the process of trying to heal her and to attend to her botched abortion, they would probably remove the baby who is probably already dead.

We are talking about doing everything to save both lives. That is what the hospitals and the emergency rooms throughout this country are about. That is not what this issue is all about.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) has expired.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself another minute, and then the gentleman may respond if he would like to.

Before Roe v. Wade was passed, women had no option in the world except to go to a back alley, turning themselves over to unspeakable people with filthy hands and dirty equipment, and oftentimes they had to go to doctors and hospitals to try to be saved. Does the gentleman from New Jersey know that many of those hospitals were afraid to take them? Is the gentleman aware that women died? Is the gentleman not aware that if this bill were to pass, that hospitals might again be afraid in a circumstance like that to save a woman, lest they violate this legislation?

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, this just says to opt out of the killing of unborn babies.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would remind all Members to address their remarks to the Chair and to properly yield time back and forth, not to enter into a conversation.

The gentlewoman from New York (Ms. SLAUGHTER) controls the time.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. The Speaker is perfectly right, Mr. Speaker, and I apologize. I simply want to make the case that if 85 percent of the hospitals refuse to give reproductive services in the United States, women will die.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, since Roe v. Wade, there have been in excess of 42 million unborn children killed by the abortionists, through chemical poisoning, through dismemberment, and most of those are for socioeconomic reasons: Abortion on demand. The baby was unwanted therefore he or she was expendible.

What the abortion lobby is attempting to do is to expand the number of places where those children can be destroyed.

Our hope is that Members will vote for this rule. There will be a motion to recommit, there will be an up-or-down vote on a motion that is from the pro-abortion side. I would hope that Members would vote "no" on that motion to recommit and then vote "yes" on the Bilirakis bill.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE).

Mr. PENCE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentlewoman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today on certainly a matter of public policy and a matter of law, but I rise more passionately in support of this rule on a matter of conscience. I am a pro-life Member of this institution and I do not apologize for that. But today's debate I would offer humbly is not really about the debate over life and choice in America; today's debate is actually about the freedom to choose, which is a central tenet of the American experience.

In the same way that no one should be forced to honor a creed that they do not protest or honor a faith that they do not hold, no one and no institution, Mr. Speaker, should be forced to perform abortions against their will, their charter, their faith, their conscience. They should be able to choose, Mr. Speaker.

Now, we are debating here whether or not this institution will take measures to enforce the express will of this institution. Legislation that was signed by President Clinton in 1996 made the law which we seek to defend today the law of the land, Mr. Speaker, but through judicial activism from the bench in Alaska and elsewhere in America, our courts are abrogating the will of the American people as expressed in the laws passed in this institution. We rise today simply to clarify current law.

I say with great respect to my passionate colleagues on the other side of this issue, Mr. Speaker, that there is no hidden agenda here. This is not about denying funding to hospitals, or prescription drugs, or that women will die. The agenda here is very, very public. It is whether or not in America today, in America's health care institutions, there is the freedom to choose; whether there is a freedom of conscience, a freedom of religion, or whether the modern orthodoxy of abortion will be enforced on hospitals as the law of the land.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, sponsors of the bill do claim that this is just a simple clarification of existing law, but that is absolutely not the case. This is an enormous change in Federal law and would represent an unprecedented intrusion by Congress onto State and local rights. We need to think about that.

Mr. Speaker, all of us believe in life. Some of us simply believe that women should have the right to choose to live as well.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, the other side says this is about choice and, yet, when health care professionals, hospitals across the United States make a choice not to perform abortions, like 86 percent of them do today, abortion proponents have teamed up to force them to perform abortions anyway, regardless of religious objections, regardless of moral objections, regardless of conscientious objections. We have a conscience clause law passed in 1996 that talks about health care entities, but because of court opinions like the one by the Supreme Court in Alaska, we have to clarify that these entities do include hospitals.

Now, look at what the other side has said. They want to increase access to abortion services by requiring hospitals; it does not say suggest, it does not say urge, it does not say pressure, it says require every hospital in the State of Maryland to perform abortions. That means every Catholic hospital, every Lutheran hospital, every government hospital. That is what they want.

In New Jersey, the pro-abortion lobby sued Our Lady of Lourdes Health Care Services, that is a Catholic agency, and tried to force them to provide abortion. We have heard about Alaska where the pro-abortion lobby went after the Valley Hospital, from whom we heard testimony on the committee, who did not want to provide abortions in the small town of Palmer, and they actually succeeded in the court case that went up to the Supreme Court that ruled that they had to perform abortions.

What happened to the right to choose? What happened to the right of conscience? I guess the right of choice only applies if you agree with the pro-abortion lobby's agenda.

Mr. Speaker, no one should be forced to have an abortion; no one should be forced to perform an abortion.

The other side is talking here on the floor about a vast right-wing conspiracy. Well, if there is a conspiracy in America, maybe it is the vast left-wing conspiracy to shove abortion down everyone's throat. Support the rule, support the bill.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I want to say to the gentleman who just spoke that hospitals have been protected since the 1970s, and there is no question about that, and that we are very keen on our side on life and health.

I want to remind everybody of a little bit of history. I am sure all of my colleagues remember the great bill on community health centers which we have not been able to reauthorize for a year. At the end of last year it came up for reauthorization on the suspension calendar and, at the last minute, they attempted to add this piece of legislation to it, but there was such an outcry that they were forced to pull it off. So this year we are going back the other way around. This bill has to be dealt with before all of the community health centers in the United States can get their due from the Congress. That, sir, is a tragedy.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mrs. MYRICK. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Ms. SLAUGHTER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 229, nays 194, not voting 9, as follows:

Mr. HALL of Texas changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

Ms. HARMAN, Mrs. BIGGERT and Mr. LANGEVIN changed their vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 546, I call up the bill (H.R. 4691) to prohibit certain abortion-related discrimination in governmental activities, and ask for its immediate consideration.

H.R. 4691

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Abortion Non-Discrimination Act of 2002".

SEC. 2. ABORTION NON-DISCRIMINATION.

Section 245 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 238n) is amended—

(1) in the section heading, by striking "REGARDING TRAINING AND LICENSING OF PHYSICIANS" and inserting "REGARDING TRAINING, LICENSING, AND PRACTICE OF PHYSICIANS AND OTHER HEALTH CARE ENTITIES";

(2) in subsection (a)(1), by striking "to perform such abortions" and inserting "to perform, provide coverage of, or pay for induced abortions"; and

(3) in subsection (c)(2)—

(A) by inserting "or other health professional," after "an individual physician";

(B) by striking "and a participant" and inserting "a participant"; and

(C) by inserting before the period the following: ", a hospital, a provider sponsored organization; a health maintenance organization, a health insurance plan, or any other kind of health care facility, organization or plan".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Pursuant to House Resolution 546, the gentleman from Florida

(Mr. BILIRAKIS) and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) each will control 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS).

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that this important legislation is before us today. We introduced H.R. 4691, the Abortion Nondiscrimination Act, to provide clarity, and I want to emphasize that, to provide clarity to an existing law, I emphasize that, to an existing law, that protects health care entities from being forced to perform abortions against their consciences. The bottom line purpose of this bill is that.

In 1996, the Congress passed and former President Clinton signed the current statute into law which is known as conscience protection. This law was intended to ensure that no health care entity would be discriminated against on the basis that they did not perform abortions. However, court interpretations have called into question whether these sections of law apply to hospitals that object to offering abortions. That is why we must act quickly to clarify existing law to ensure that these protections are afforded to all types of health care entities.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to clarify two points in debate on this bill. Some have charged that this legislation is a massive expansion of current protections; and, Mr. Speaker, that is just false. The original law was intended, whatever happened to legislative intent for crying out loud, the original law was intended to apply to the broadest definition of health care entities. Transcripts from the debates in 1996 and in extensions of remarks in 1998 show that the original authors of the conscience protection intended a broad definition, a broad definition of health care entity. The other contention is that somehow this bill would allow facilities to not provide life saving care. Again, this is false. In fact, in all cases, facilities are regulated, as we know, by laws that require the provision of life saving care and all hospitals are prepared to provide appropriate life saving care.

What this bill does do is protect facilities from being mandated to offer abortions. We must ask ourselves if we want to force people to provide elective procedures that are fundamentally in opposition to their consciences. The gentleman from Indiana (Mr. PENCE) said it very well during the debate on the rule. "I would add that neither the American Medical Association, nor the American Hospital Association believe that anyone, anyone, should be forced to provide elective care against their conscience," and again I emphasize elective care, against their conscience.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is really a very simple technical correction. It is not a massive expansion or a policy to limit access to health care for women. On the contrary, this bill ensures that all facilities will continue to be free to provide the types of services that they find appropriate, and it will not force facilities to close because of fundamental objections to elective medical procedures.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill and I urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 4691.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we are spending a few hours today debating the abortion nondiscrimination bill. Despite this bill's troubling implications for women and despite the strong concerns many of my colleagues and I have about the bill, Republican leadership bypassed the committee and brought it straight to the floor.

While we debate this bill today, a number of issues continue to languish. When my colleagues and I have asked Republican leadership to hold a hearing on legislation that promotes greater competition in the prescription drug marketplace and brings down the cost of prescription drugs, they did nothing. When we asked them to bring the competition bill to the floor, they did nothing.

The Senate has passed similar legislation. If we were to debate it on the floor today, we would pass it, and we would be one step closer to bringing down the cost of prescription drugs. Yet, this Republican leadership is going to send us home before our work is done without passing a bill to cover prescription drugs, without passing a bill to try to get the price of prescription drugs down.

Now, today's House Republicans are proposing legislation that curtails health care information and curtails services available to women, again, before they bring something as important as prescription drug pricing to the floor. The public has every right to question the priorities of Republican leadership. While the partisan proponents of this bill, H.R. 4691, while the partisan proponents of this bill say it is a simple clarification of existing law, experts agree it is a broad, sweeping change to existing law.

Federal law now allows doctors and hospitals to refuse to perform abortion services because of their religious beliefs. That is Federal law. That is the way it should be. That is what we all agree on.

This bill, however, allows insurance plans and HMOs, not religious organizations, insurance plans and HMOs to refuse to provide or to make a referral for abortion services regardless of religious background, regardless of a woman's medical needs. Under this bill, insurance companies could deny coverage of family planning services just because the time spent with the patient doing nondirective counseling just might eat away at the HMO's bottom line.

Under this bill, Medicaid patients would no longer be guaranteed access to abortion counseling, to abortion counseling in cases of rape and incest, or where the pregnancy endangers the woman's life. Under this bill, State law expanding health insurance requirements to include coverage of nondirective family planning counseling would become irrelevant.

The current conscience clause allows doctors and hospitals to refuse to provide services they are opposed to for religious reasons. That is the way it should be. This bill, however, gags doctors, gags hospitals, regardless of their religious belief. It denies women access to medically necessary services, again regardless of religious beliefs.

Existing law protects a woman's right to medically accurate information. It protects a State's right to govern by its constitution and its laws, and my friends on the other side of the aisle always talk about States rights, unless they do not like the State law. It protects the medical institution's right to refuse to provide services they are religiously opposed to.

Mr. Speaker, we should have passed the prescription drug bill. We are obviously not doing that today. We should be promoting women's health. We are sure not doing that today. What we are doing is compromising women's health.

I urge my colleagues to oppose this expansive, broad-ranging infringement on women's rights and infringement on women's health. It is a bad bill. Vote "no."

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman easily forgets that we passed a prescription drug bill last June, and it is the other body which has sat on it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS), a member of the committee.

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, in America we believe in rights. We believe in the right of free speech. We believe in the right to choose our religion, right to peaceably assemble, other rights that are enshrined in our Declaration of Independence and every American's right to act according to the dictates of his conscience.

Historically, this right to conscience has applied to individuals and to private organizations as well. In 1996, Congress enacted a law to protect the right of a health care entity to decline to participate in abortion and if they had a conscience against killing unborn children, to decline to participate in this. However, some have read the 1996 law very narrowly to say that it protects only residents and residency programs and only in a training context, and we have had court decisions saying that this health care entity language does not include the full range of participants in providing health care, such as hospitals and health plans and professionals of the facilities.

So this bill, ANDA, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act, would clarify existing law, strengthen existing law by providing that health care entities should not be forced by the government to pay for abortions or be penalized or discriminated against by government agencies for choosing not to provide or to perform abortions which 86 percent of our hospitals presently choose. It is needed to respond to this national effort that was referred to earlier on the floor by certain groups to force all health care providers to participate in abortions; and we have cited examples in New Jersey, in Alaska, others in Connecticut, in New Hampshire, various places.

So the opponents raise issues like gag rule. Protection from being forced to do abortion referral is part of the 1996 law now. This bill does not create it. Exemption from informed consent or counseling requirements is not found in the 1996 law or in this bill. There is no gag rule here. The bill's protections apply to those who do not want to perform or to make arrangements for or to subsidize abortions against their will.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a radical law. This is reasonable. Pro-choicers and pro-lifers have sponsored this bill that we have before us today. We should not force Catholic hospitals to refer for abortion or provide for abortion or other hospitals who have a conscience against it. I urge support of the bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I would add that the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) mentioned this House passed a drug bill in June, one written by the drug companies and advertised by the drug companies and does not serve consumers.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. WAXMAN), who had an amendment he wanted to offer to this bill that the partisan majority would not allow him to offer yesterday in the Committee on Rules.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is an enormous change in current policy about reproductive health, about patients' rights and about federalism. It is not a simple clarification as some have termed it. That may well be the reason we have this process of getting to the floor without markups in committee or subcommittee, without any chance on the floor to offer an amendment.

Let me explain why I say this is a very, very radical bill.

Under current law, beginning since the time of Roe v. Wade, there have been Federal laws that allow doctors, nurses and hospitals to refuse to perform abortion services because of their religious beliefs, and they still can get Federal funds for other services. Catholic doctors do not have to perform abortions. Catholic hospitals do not have to support abortion clinics. This permission for people to refuse because of their religious or moral objection is established already in the law and it is working smoothly, but this bill goes far beyond that.

This bill first and most obvious is not a bill about religion or conscience. While current law says that doctors and hospitals can exercise their religious or moral objections, this bill is not defined in that way. This bill would allow insurance companies and HMOs to ignore laws about patients' information and gag rules because they want to cut costs, because they want to reduce benefits or for no reason at all. Any HMO could gag its doctor, not because HMOs have a conscience, but because they would rather cut time with the patient from 9 minutes to 8. Any public hospital could decide that it would be easier if they did not have a protester out front. Further, this bill would allow the gag rule to govern for title X family planning grantees and this would reverse long-standing policy of providing nondirective information on all options.

Secondly, this bill is not just about doctors or even hospitals refusing to provide services. Those people are given permission to refuse under current law. This bill lets hospitals, insurance plans, HMOs and other corporate entities to gag their doctors and nurses from giving medically appropriate information to their patients. In other words, it would allow them to engage in what is medical malpractice, not giving the information their patients are entitled to receive.

We have tried to get a Patients' Bill of Rights enacted. We have had differences on the ability to sue to enforce those rights, but this bill instead provides a legal protection for a gag. It takes away patients' rights. This is a patients' bill of nonrights and having totally failed to enact the bill to protect patients' rights from the abuse of managed care, the majority is now moving to undo the efforts to those States who have enacted their own patient protection law.

That is the last point I want to make. It overrides State laws. It overrides the constitution in the State of Alaska where it says that a public hospital who is the only provider of services in the entire region must be available for legal abortion services. We should not overturn lightly the constitution of the State of Alaska. We are not here to regulate health insurance at the Federal level. That is what most of my Republican colleagues would object to, and yet they allow this to happen.

This is not a bill about religion. It is not about equal protection. It is the exact opposite, of guaranteeing constitutional rights to safe and legal abortions, family planning and medical privacy; and there is no Federal legitimate purpose here.

I would urge Members to oppose this bill and support the motion to recommit which will make this do what the authors say they want to do.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. VITTER).

Mr. VITTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act, H.R. 4691. The bill before us is, in fact, a much-needed clarification of current law that was meant to provide full conscience protection to health entities, health providers who because of any moral convictions choose not to have anything to do with abortion; but unfortunately today, we will hear a lot of overblown rhetoric from the other side that the sky is falling, that this simple bill is something much more, when it is not, and arguments from people interestingly who say they are pro-choice, yet apparently when a hospital or a clinic or a provider, a doctor makes a choice, the right choice in my opinion, and chooses life, the other side is up in arms.

We have statements and they are documented from proabortion groups that they are actively engaged in a project to force all hospitals, often against their will or moral convictions, to provide abortions; and we know that the ACLU files lawsuits to force providers to perform abortions in States across the country, and sadly, sometimes activist courts find in their favor.

This really exposes the choice side for what they really believe in, which is not choice at all; and it flies in the face of all of their superficial choice rhetoric. It exposes the real proabortion agenda. Furthermore, it makes this commonsense legislation a necessary response from Congress whose intent in the original legislation was clearly to provide full conscience protection, and that intent clearly has been maligned in significant cases.

I want to thank and commend the gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. TAUZIN), the Committee on Energy and Commerce chairman, as well as the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), the subcommittee chairman, for their tremendous efforts in guiding this valuable legislation to the floor, and I urge adoption.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. CAPPS), a member of the committee.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today not only as an elected representative but also as a public health nurse and as the former director of the Santa Barbara School District Teenage Parenting and Pregnancy Project.

I have firsthand experience with the struggles of many young women around the difficult subject of sex. I have dealt with teenagers trying to cope with the ramifications of bad decisions, and I have seen the terrible results when we turn our back and deny them help.

I am deeply troubled by this bill. I consider myself a religious person, and I hold in high respect the deep-seated values and feelings of Americans on the subject of productive health, but no one should have the authority to force his or her personal views upon others.

The Abortion Non-Discrimination Act does just that by overruling a State's rights to enforce laws and to design its own Medicaid program. This legislation is harmful to women. It would allow health care entities to refuse to comply with Federal, State and local laws pertaining to abortion services and referrals.

Under this measure, recipients of title X funds could defy current requirements that enable a woman to receive information upon request about all legal reproductive options.

Not only does this legislation deny women access to vital medical care, it is also unnecessary. Current law already protects the rights of individuals with religious or conscientious objection who may opt out of providing abortion-related services if they so choose; but institutions do not have the same rights as individuals, nor should they. Health care facilities exist to provide services. It should be rare when such a facility denies access to care to anyone. And all a health facility is required to do is to give a woman a referral upon request and to provide an abortion only if they choose in cases of rape or incest or when the life of the mother is in danger.

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that existing law gives sufficient deference to moral objections. Enacting broader conscience or refusal clauses for health entities only leaves women without medical services that they have a constitutional right to.

For decades women have fought to gain access to the reproductive health services that they need. Last year alone, title X services enabled women to avoid 1 million unintended pregnancies, nearly half of which would have ended in abortion.

This bill would reverse these proven success rates. In fact, this bill is so confusing, it does not even define what an abortion is. And so I respectfully ask the honorable gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) to explain. Is emergency contraception an abortion? How about oral contraceptives? How about condoms or even advice on where to get this information?

Before we vote, I respectfully ask the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) to define what constitutes an abortion.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such additional time as I might require.

I guess I have to continue to respond to statements made by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN), my good friend and the ranking member of my subcommittee, when he talks about prescription drugs. The bill was not written by the drug companies. If the drug companies had anything to do with the bill, I certainly did not know about it; and I played a large part in that.

I am talking about a prescription drug bill for seniors now. The bill as it was written was not perfect, but it consisted of $50 billion more than the minority had placed in their budget and intended to write a bill in the previous Congress. So it is more expensive than the bill that they came up with previously. The bill would help the poor to a very large extent. It would help the very sick to a tremendous extent, and it would help an awful lot of people in between; and it is unfortunate that politics is being played with a piece of legislation which is far from perfect, which is not something that we all would like to see ultimately take place but something that would help people at this point in time.

I would go on, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to read from additional views of Senators Coats, GREGG, FRIST, DEWINE, MCCONNELL, and HUTCHINSON in 1998 during the debate.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, is that permissible for me to read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). Does the gentleman state a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I guess I am. I noticed the Parliamentarian stood up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair would inquire is it related to proceedings regarding the legislative history on the bill the House is considering?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. It is definitely related to it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman may proceed.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. In any case, this took place during the Health Professions Education Partnerships Act of 1998, and the additional views said Congress explained that the term "health care entity" includes an individual physician, a post-graduate physician training program, and a participant in a program of training in the health professions, 42 U.S.C. 238n(c)(2)(1996).

They went on to say, and I read verbatim, and this is significant, Mr. Speaker, because of claims made by the other side that this is an expansion of what was intended at that point in time: "We believe that the term 'health care entity' in 42 U.S.C. 238n was intended to be read in the straightforward manner of 'including' not only the specific entities mentioned but also those which are routinely seen as health care entities in common usage and other Federal laws, such as a hospital, provider sponsored entity, health maintenance organization, health plan, or any other type of health . . . entities generally seen as 'health care entities' under Federal law. We intend to explore other means of definitively resolving this question of legislative intent." And that was signed by the Senators that I mentioned earlier.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

The gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), my friend, said that the drug companies did not write the drug bill that this House in a partisan vote passed. I guess we are all mistaken, but I would like to recount for a moment how this drug legislation passed this House of Representatives.

Back in June we worked on a markup on a bill that the drug companies were totally in support of. There was a fundraiser that had been scheduled for one evening. We stopped the markup so that Republicans could troop off to the fundraiser with the President and the Vice President which raised $30 million, $3 million of it from drug companies. The sponsor of the fundraiser, the chairman of it, was the CEO of a British drug company, GlaxoSmithKline, which gave $300,000 to the Republican campaign coffers.

The next day we came back, passed a bill, defeated every amendment on a partisan vote that was a proconsumer, prosenior amendment. The bill then passed in a partisan vote. It passed the House in a partisan vote.

And then in the most cynical move I have seen in 10 years in Congress, the drug companies spent literally millions of dollars advertising on television, thanking the Republicans for passing their drug bill. The only thing was, Mr. Speaker, they did not say "paid for by" Pfizer or Merck or Eli Lilly or Pharmacia or Glaxo. They said paid for by United Seniors Association or paid for by 60 Plus. So the drug companies spent millions of dollars thanking the Republicans, but they used a front group to make it look like it was a senior organization or actually two senior organizations thanking the Republicans.

If the public only knew that all those ads were paid for by the drug industry, then Republican Members of Congress would not be getting calls thanking them for voting for it. They would be getting calls saying go back to Washington and pass a drug bill that actually helps seniors, that actually helps consumers, that does not help the drug industry continue to be the most profitable industry in America, continue to be in a situation where they pay the lowest tax rate of any industry in America. And I think people in this country have had enough and we are going to find a little more about that come November.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. LEE).

Ms. LEE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership on this issue and so many issues important to the health of all Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in very strong opposition to this politically motivated anti-woman bill. How could we as representatives of the people lawfully permit health care providers to really ignore the Constitution and the Supreme Court?

Let us be clear. H.R. 4691 radically alters current law and could gag health care providers from giving women, who may face an unintended pregnancy, including rape and incest, all of her legal medical options.

This is really a domestic version of the global gag rule which really should be repealed. This bill would muzzle health care providers who participate in the title X program by eliminating providers' options which enable women to receive information upon request, just upon request, about all of their available medical options.

In the absence of a referral requirement, health care providers may be able to effectively gag health care practitioners from giving such referrals to women who request them. This bill is really outrageous. It is simply another in the long parade of bad bills the majority continues to schedule in order to promote their political ideology and their political message while avoiding and refusing to schedule the real work of the House.

Mr. Speaker, where is the Labor-HHS appropriations bill? Why are we not working on that today instead of considering legislation that amounts to nothing more than a dangerous assault on women's reproductive rights? We should be funding the important health programs in the Labor-HHS bill. I urge Members to vote "yes" on the motion to recommit and "no" on this very bad bill.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. LEE. I yield to the gentlewoman from California.

Mrs. CAPPS. Mr. Speaker, I request from the gentleman from Florida (Chairman BILIRAKIS) a definition of the term "abortion." As we prepare to vote on this very important legislation, could the gentleman help us frame what we are voting about? Are we voting about a surgical procedure? Are we voting about emergency contraception? Does an abortion constitute oral contraception or condoms?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlewoman yield?

Ms. LEE. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I would advise the gentlewoman, this is not about abortion. This is about freedom. This is what has been said before, and said over again. That is why I read the statement I just read, basically giving people the moral rights to make their decisions. That is what it is all about.

I am not going to give the gentlewoman a definition for abortion or anything of that nature. It is not pertinent to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. PITTS).

Mr. PITTS. Mr. Speaker, my esteemed colleague on the other side said existing laws protects only religiously affiliated health care providers from forced involvement in abortion and that this bill expands that. That is absolutely false. H.R. 4691 does not expand the law at all on this point. Existing law protects secular as well as religious providers.

H.R. 4691 clarifies the definition of health care entity in this law so it clearly covers nurses as well as physicians, hospitals, as well as training programs in hospitals. This charge of expanding the law beyond religious to secular entities I think is a red herring.

About title X, compromising the ability of title X clients to obtain information critical to their health, I think that is false. Nothing in H.R. 4691 limits Federal or State agency's abilities to require the provision of accurate information about abortion or abortion providers.

Under H.R. 4691, government may not penalize a private health care entity for declining to provide or make arrangements for abortions. States should not be able to force people or hospitals to be involved in an abortion, especially when they try to base the right to coerce on the fact that medical institutions receive Federal funding.

Conscience protection is a civil right. The Federal Government has the right and the duty to protect conscience by making sure that any entity that receives Federal funding does not discriminate against any person or organization just because they do not want to be involved in an abortion. I might say that 46 States in our country presently have conscience protection laws.

I might quote from the American Medical Association. They say: "Neither physician, hospital, nor hospital personnel shall be required to perform any act violative of personally held moral principles."

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 30 seconds.

The other side of the aisle has repeatedly quoted the American Medical Association. Members need to understand they have taken no position on this bill. They are not in support of it. They have not taken a position either way.

However, the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists have asked for a "no" vote on this bill because they really understand this issue better than anyone. They know this bill is not a minor change in Federal law, but a broad-reaching change that denies information and access to women, even women whose health is in jeopardy or women who have been raped or are victims of incest.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia (Ms. NORTON).

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, in the prior exchange, the failure of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS) to indicate what an abortion is was an important concession because in effect it says an abortion is anything that a provider says it is. It makes this legislation completely untenable.

What we are witnessing is the umpteenth attempt of the Republicans to invade Roe v. Wade. I have to give the majority credit, though; the majority is determined to deny a woman the right to control her own body by any means necessary. That is why they keep coming to the floor with these provisions.

Yes, this bill is about discrimination, discrimination against women and discrimination against the States. They wrap themselves in a conscience clause cloak. We could never have gotten this far if we did not have ironclad conscience clause protection in our law.

I have got two great Catholic universities in my district, Georgetown University, with which I am personally associated as a tenured law professor, and Catholic University. Georgetown University Provident Hospital does not have the slightest doubt that they and their health care services already are strenuously covered by the existing conscience clause.

This is not a conscience clause. This is a cop-out clause. What it does essentially is to open the floodgates. The first to take advantage of this clause are going to be the health care plans and the HMOs. These are the guys who are already saying to physicians, we're timing you on how much time you can spend with patients urgently in need of health care. Do you think they are going to continue to give informed consent by providing the kind of counseling that Federal law provides? They know a loophole when they see one.

We have already closed every Federal door to a woman's right to choose with a Hyde amendment and with a plethora of other provisions. Now we have gone to the next level. We are invading States rights and the rights of the States to provide health care by changing Federal law to invade State territory. Ever since Roe, we have said not with Federal dollars. Now we are telling the States what to do with their dollars and what to do with their laws.

Let the States' rights Republicans take a page out of their own prayer book. Stand down. Let the States run their own State health care systems.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to read from the American Medical Association Code of Ethics, H-5.995, on abortion. It goes on to say, "Neither physician, hospital, nor hospital personnel shall be required to perform any act violative of personally held moral principles. In these circumstances, good medical practice requires only that the physician or other professional withdraw from the case, so long as the withdrawal is consistent with good medical practice."

That is the gist of this piece of legislation, intending to clarify what was intended back in 1996. I have not looked up who voted for that bill or who voted against it, but the fact of the matter is that is the bottom line of what we are trying to accomplish today.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. I thank my good friend for yielding time. I want to compliment him on his leadership as well as his courage in offering this bill today.

Mr. Speaker, a moment ago, the gentlewoman from the District of Columbia talked about this being the umpteenth time that we have dealt with the abortion issue. Frankly, I am very proud of the fact that pro-lifers have refused to roll over, those of us who have a moral and a conscientious objection to the killing of unborn children and the injuring of their mothers, do whatever we can, whenever we can to preserve at least some of the lives who otherwise would be destroyed by the violence of abortion.

Let us not forget what we are talking about. Abortion either dismembers unborn children or it chemically poisons unborn children and it does it in a horrific way. It is a painful, violent death imposed upon children and it also is injurious to mothers, especially in a psychological way and in long-lasting physical ways. What we are dealing with today, Mr. Speaker, is conscience protection for hospitals and those institutions that protect and preserve and nurture life so that they will not be coerced into performing abortions or referring for abortions.

I would remind my colleagues that OLYMPIA SNOWE, who is not a pro-lifer, said when this was up in 1996 that an institution or an individual who does not want to perform an abortion should not be compelled to do so in a way that is contrary to their beliefs. Unfortunately, while the intent of the legislation signed by the President in 1996 was clear, the language apparently was not, or at least in the eyes of some, and some courts and some attorneys general have been trying to compel health organizations, hospitals, to be involved in abortions.

Some courts and pro-abortion groups are so extreme that they want to force hospitals to do abortions against their will. The whole board of directors, the hospital staff could say we will not participate in this anti-life child battering enterprise but they could be compelled by a State or by some court to do so absent the enactment of this legislation.

In my own home State of New Jersey, Elizabeth General Medical Center agreed to consolidate with St. Elizabeth's Hospital and no longer perform abortions. Subsequently a New Jersey Superior Court judge reviewing the consolidation issued an outrageous judgment that brought the pro-abortion organizations into the equation and approved a settlement to place $2 million in a trust for the performance of abortions and abortion referrals. In other words, they got money from the pro-lifers to enable the killing of unborn children.

This debate is all about human rights, I say to my friends, about child violence. We can mask it, we can sanitize it and we do. We do it quite well. We are Members of Congress. We are politicians. But the fact of the matter is that killing unborn children is violence against children, and dismemberment and chemical poisoning in no way can be construed to be a benign act. It kills babies. Look at the ultrasounds and the great progress that has been made in refining ultrasounds. Today you can see a baby in great detail before birth. The abortionist looks at that same reality—that same baby and kills that baby. I think it is to their credit that 86 percent of all the hospitals in America are all about lifesaving and nurturing and healing—they refuse to do abortions. They are not about killing babies. They are not about putting poisons into their amniotic sacs in order to procure a baby's death. They are not about dismembering the arms and the legs and the torso and the head—decapitation is commonplace in the abortion mills all over America, with 42 to 43 million dead babies and counting a horrific loss of life.

Now we see the abortion lobby, and NARAL makes it very clear, they have a plan when there are consolidations to make sure that these hospitals who are now pro-life, whether they are religiously affiliated or not, to provide abortions. NARAL says it very clearly on one of their websites and we know that this is part of an aggresive strategy, to expand abortions where they are absolutely not wanted. Babies are precious. Their mothers are precious. Let us promote lifesaving, nonviolent alternatives to abortion, not the enabling and the killing of babies.

Someday every Member who has been voting for abortion will rue the day. They will wake up in the middle of the night and say, how could I? Just like looking back in antiquity we look back and say how could people like Washington and Jefferson and others have had slaves? There was a blind spot then. There is a blind spot today. Abortion is violence against children. Brown enables it and expands it. Vote for the Bilirakis bill and against the Brown motion to recommit.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Of course we are not telling hospitals and doctors to provide abortions. We have already settled that issue. No doctor, no hospital should be forced to do that. We are just saying that a woman who has been raped or a woman who has been a victim of incest, whose life because of the pregnancy might be in danger, who comes to a hospital, comes to any hospital, should be given access to information, should be referred, should be told where she might be able to get counseling or might be able to get help. That is all that we are saying, that we know this legislation takes that right away.

Again, think about that. Imagine, a woman who has been raped, a woman who has been a victim of incest, who is pregnant, whose life may be in danger from that pregnancy gets turned away from a hospital under this legislation, gets turned away from a hospital, nobody will talk to her because this rigid, far-right agenda of the Republican Party says we are against abortion and we make no exceptions for rape, we make no exceptions for incest, we make no exceptions for the health of the mother.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD).

Ms. MILLENDER-MCDONALD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio in his efforts to try to bring some sanity to this bill.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BILIRAKIS), it seems to me that it is a moral obligation to ensure that information regarding the reproductive rights of women be given to her. And is it not true that institutions cannot restrict providers from offering medically appropriate information and services? Can you answer that for me?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. The only answer I will give the gentlewoman is that this is not intended to be an expansion on what is already law. We are trying to clarify as a result of court action that has taken place regarding the legislation that now exists.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. So this bill then has an opt-out of performing any abortion services, including counseling or referral? Does this bill do that? It opts out performing any abortion services, counseling or referral?

Mr. BILIRAKIS. It is not intended to do that, nor does the bill say that.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. THORNBERRY). All Members will suspend.

The Chair would remind all Members to direct their remarks to the Chair and if they seek to yield time, to formally yield time to other Members and then that time can be yielded back.

Ms. MILLENDER-McDONALD. I thank the Speaker very much for that.

I again just cannot believe that we are here today to speak about yet another assault on women's fundamental rights to be informed regarding all of her reproductive rights. Just over 2 months ago, we were here again advocating against the passage of legislation banning another aspect of a woman's reproductive choice. Today we stand again to defend a woman's basic rights to be informed of her options with regards to her reproductive health when she is most vulnerable. As we have mentioned and stated, it is not our mission to dictate the most personal choice any woman can ever make regarding her health. We are here to pass fair, effective legislation that will guarantee all women the opportunity to make the best possible decisions about her health. Besides, infringing on a woman's right to decide what is best for her health as in the case of H.R. 4691 will undermine States' rights to enforce their own constitutional protections. This sets a dangerous precedent, Mr. Speaker, if we begin to violate the principles of Federal law by essentially overruling State constitutions. We should not attempt to block Federal title X guidelines that allow women full access to information with regard to their reproductive health choices.

If this piece of legislation passes, H.R. 4691, we would prevent the Federal Government from enforcing its own requirement with reference to title X-funded clinics that refer patients to abortion providers upon request. Further, passage of H.R. 4691 would prevent States from following the Hyde amendment which mandates that Medicaid patients be informed about legal abortion services in the event of rape, incest or a pregnancy that threatens a woman's life.

I say, let us defeat this bill that does not give women their reproductive choices.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time. I want to rise in strong support of this bill and reiterate some of the points that I made in my comments in the debate on the rule. This bill has been characterized by its opponents as an assault on their side of the issue, the pro-abortion or pro-choice side. I would argue very, very strongly that that is very much not the case. The law as I interpret it is very, very clear. It seeks to clarify the conscience clause that was enacted by this body and signed into law by the President of the United States, William Jefferson Clinton, in 1996. This dispute arose over a disagreement surrounding a requirement that physicians in training, residents, be forced to learn how to do abortions to get their accreditation and get their license to practice obstetrics and gynecology when in fact they were personally opposed to doing abortions. For most Members of the House, that was a no-brainer. If you are pro-life, why should we the government have laws and regulations that would force a physician in training to have to learn to do a procedure that they find morally and ethically repugnant?

Under the provisions of the law, and I have a copy of the law right here, we encompassed it to include health care entities. I interpreted that at the time, I was here, I voted for it, that it would also include some obvious health care entities like hospitals and HMOs.

But under the aggressive attempt on the part of the pro-choice community to expand the availability of abortion procedures in America, they have used the courts, which has always been their traditional tool to advance their agenda, to expand or redefine the law such that a hospital or an HMO is not a health care entity.

What we seek to do in this statute is to just clarify that act. To define us as engaging in this great assault on Row v. Wade, when really what we are trying to do is protect freedom of conscience or freedom of choice, to me, is just not an accurate interpretation of it.

As far as some of these claims and assertions that we will prevent people from being counseled, if you look at the language, it is very, very clear. If any health care entity voluntarily elects not only to train people to do abortions, but as well to perform them, or refer for an abortion, that is not infringed by this act.

I want to clarify another very, very important thing, I know this is a very sensitive issue for a lot of Members in the body, and this is this debate about contraception.

There have been people who have come to this floor today and tried to assert that the language in this bill would bar the provision of contraception services in many institutions that are already providing it. Please show me in the statute where you find that interpretation. I think it could be described as a tremendous misinterpretation or a tremendous stretch of the imagination.

The provision of contraceptive services has never been defined as abortion in Federal statute, nor has emergency contraception, what has commonly been interpreted as the morning-after pill. Now, some religious groups may interpret that as abortion, but we make no reference in this statute to religious groups or their definitions; and under the current FDA policy that is considered contraception, and it is not affected at all by this statute.

This law, in my opinion, represents a very clear attempt to prevent what I consider to be the extreme agenda of the pro-abortion community to try to advance what they want to do.

We have had many people come down to the floor quoting from a NARAL Web site about their agenda, which is to force many institutions, and 85 percent of hospitals in America today do not provide abortion services, to force them to do that, using current Federal laws and statutes.

Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation, I think, is very clear. It is not ambiguous. Its intent is to protect the freedom of these institutions to not engage in this procedure.

I ask Members to support this bill.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER).

Mr. NADLER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this bill. I think a dose of reality may be helpful in this debate.

The extremist pro-abortion, pro-choice forces want women to have their constitutional rights. The people who have gotten 85 percent of the hospitals in this country not to be willing to provide an abortion to a woman who requests it want to deny, to make it impossible, for women to exercise what the Supreme Court says is their constitutional right. That is the crux of the debate.

Let us have a dose of reality.

Fact one: this bill has never been considered by any committee of this House, not in hearings, not in markup, not ever. A cynical person might view it as a crass attempt to pander to an extremist constituency on the eve of an election, especially since we know it is dead on arrival in the Senate. But you do not have to be cynical to know that this bill needs to be looked at more carefully, at the very least. Every Member should make up for the negligence of the committees of jurisdiction in not considering this bill by reading the fine print and not listening only to the rhetoric.

Fact two: this bill, despite its lofty title, is not about discrimination. It would cancel out every State law protecting a woman's right to choice and the right of every American to demand health care coverage that meets her medical needs. This Congress has failed to act on prescription drug coverage. This Congress has killed any hope of universal health care coverage. Now the Republican leadership of the House wants to help the for-profit health care industry rob our constituents of medical services to which they have a constitutional right.

Fact three: this bill is not about religious liberty or conscience. Read the bill. Copies of it are sitting on the table just outside the Chamber. The bill covers any hospital, any HMO, any insurer, any facility, any organization, any plan, even if they are for-profit, even if they do not have religious or moral objections to an abortion. I am not aware that HMOs or insurance companies have religious consciences, even if they just want to save a little money at the expense of our constituents.

Fact four: nearly every State protects the right of any individual who objects on moral or religious grounds to performing abortions. So that issue is a red herring. It does not need further discussion. The States protect that right already.

Fact five: There is a domestic terrorist movement that uses violence, murder, bombings and harassment to undermine the ability of women to go to the doctor and receive constitutionally protected health care services. Many medical facilities have knuckled under to this wave of domestic terrorism and simply stopped providing those services. This bill rewards those terrorists.

Fact six: This bill is not limited to the actual performance of abortions. It would also apply to laws that require health care providers to supply women with basic information so that they can make informed decisions about their health care options, exercising their consciences. The consciences that are being violated by this bill are the consciences of women who may want to choose to avail themselves of their constitutional right to choose to have an abortion. This bill would also apply to some forms of birth control.

Let us be clear, this bill is not about religious freedom or protecting the right of conscience. That is already protected by law. This bill is simply an attempt to make it harder for women to obtain an abortion, to vital health care services. If this Congress is unable to expand access to health care, the least Members can do is vote not to restrict it further.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, at least the pro-abortion forces are being very clear about what their position is. They now want to force people who disagree with their position to perform abortions, to counsel for abortions, to pay for abortion through insurance laws.

We have things in the United States called voluntary associations, and if voluntary associations want to form an insurance company that may or may not cover different things, apparently they can cover about anything, unless it is a moral view. In fact, my friend, the gentleman from New York, should know that the Catholic hospitals of the City of New York have in fact formed an HMO. There are many religious institutions in this country and many religious people who have bonded together to form health insurance of all different types.

We should have a right, those of us, regardless of what the Court says, those of us who have a moral view that abortion is murder, should not be forced to counsel, pay for or fund that murder.

It is one thing to say we are going to deprive someone else of their human right to what I believe is to take another human life, and I believe the right to life is preeminent and I believe the Court decision was wrong, but even if you agree with that Court decision, why would you force me, who believes that the taking of these innocent little babies is an abominable sin, why would you force me to say I cannot have insurance coverage that does not pay for that?

I cannot fund a hospital or participate in caring for the poor and caring for people who need health care unless I will also fund what I find to be as abominable as the killing of innocent little babies? Why deprive me of my rights? Why deprive me of my rights of association? Why deprive those people who are not necessarily a majority, we are evenly divided in this country, but why deprive the people who believe it is morally wrong of their right to not fund it, to not counsel it?

There are alternatives. If there are all these people who favor abortion, if there are all these people who support abortion and all these abortions, there are plenty of options for them. Why make me and the people who find this abominable have to pay for this?

The reason this law is needed is in fact the courts in several States have challenged the HMO laws, the hospital laws; and we need this legislation.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Mr. Speaker, I repeat, I have seen one Republican man after another Republican man after another Republican man come down to the House floor and insist that we are forcing physicians and hospitals to perform abortions that in good conscience they do not want to perform.

That is not part of the issue. That issue is solved. No one will have to perform abortions. We do not think people should have to perform abortions, doctors or hospitals, if they do not choose to. That issue is settled.

For them to continue to put up that straw man, for them to continue to use that red herring, is intellectually dishonest, and their far right, no exceptions for rape and incest, far right agenda, they know that; and they should just be a little more honest with the American public.

Now, what is wrong with this whole debate today? First of all, what is first wrong with the debate is we are talking again about a health issue that we really should not be talking about, and we are not acting on prescription drug legislation. We are doing nothing in this Congress to try to lower the cost of prescription drugs.

The second thing that is wrong with this debate is this bill is on the House floor today having bypassed the committee structure. With all the disagreements on what people think about this bill and all the interpretations, it should have been in committee. My friends on the other side of the aisle know that we should have discussed it in committees, we should have had a markup, we should have been able to figure out all these questions.

Third, my friends on the other side of the aisle always talk about States' rights, we should respect what the States do. This legislation overrides States' rights. They are for States' rights, unless they do not like what the States do, then we are going to override States' rights.

Four, as the gentleman from New York (Mr. NADLER) said, as an example, a for-profit health maintenance organization having nothing to do with religion, a for-profit health maintenance organization can simply refuse counseling services to a woman who has been a victim of rape or incest, for example, can refuse it just to save money.

Now, insurance companies, will they do that? These are the same insurance companies that cover Viagra in many, many cases, in most insurance companies; but they do not cover contraceptives for women, which is one of the biggest expenses that women of childbearing age face.

So, sure, some HMOs are going to do that. To save money, they are going to refuse counseling to a woman that might be a victim of rape or incest whose health might be in jeopardy.

Again, Mr. Speaker, there is no allowance in this legislation for rape, there is no allowance for incest, there is no allowance for protecting the life and the health of the woman. I know that fits the far right Republican agenda. They want no abortions in this country, they want no exceptions for rape, no exceptions for incest, no exceptions for the life and health of the woman. That is why this legislation is on the floor today, in order to fulfill that agenda and play to that far right base of the Republican Party.

But, frankly, where I come from, Mr. Speaker, there are differences of opinion on abortion. Some say we should allow them; some say we should not. But almost everybody I know thinks that when a woman has been a victim of rape or incest, and particularly if her life is in danger, almost everybody I know thinks that woman should be entitled to make that choice if she chooses.

That is why this legislation is a bad idea, Mr. Speaker. That is why this Congress should oppose this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the ranking member knows that we have had a hearing on this issue in committee; and as far as the consistency regarding States' rights, I dare say that both parties over the years have been far from consistent on that particular issue.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. MORELLA).

Mrs. MORELLA. I thank the gentleman for yielding, particularly because I am rising in opposition to this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, claims that this bill is a clarification of existing law is just incorrect. The act would be a sweeping new Federal exemption from current laws and regulations that assure women access to health services.

I think it is very important to acknowledge that no Federal law requires any health care entity to provide abortion services. Furthermore, there is no requirement that any individual participate in the provision of reproductive health services.

Currently, title X, Family Planning Programs require that clinic staff give their clients the information and referrals for all their legal options upon their request, adoption, carrying to term, abortion; and this legislation would override that existing Federal law, and it would deny pregnant women all the information that they should have about their options.

Also the opt-out for Medicaid coverage, currently the Hyde amendment to the Medicaid program stipulation that Medicaid clients must have access to those services in case of rape, incest or where the pregnancy endangers a woman's life.

Just remember, this is not a mirror of current law; this is absolutely aborting the State and Federal laws.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I just want to introduce for point of clarification, there have been statements made about how this is not an issue that should apply to health care plans or insurance companies, and I just want to state the case of Fidelis Health Care of New York. This is a Catholic archdiocese of New York cooperative managed health care plan. Immediately after it was started, Family Planning Advocates of New York, FPA they are called; they are an affiliate of Planned Parenthood International, pursued aggressive action against this HMO. They have called upon the State Health Department to "increase its monitoring of Fidelis informational and referral processes concerning reproductive health care," and they are supporting legislation in the New York legislature to force them to provide abortion counseling.

So what we are talking about is we have a Catholic doctor in a Catholic hospital with a Catholic nurse, all of them are pro-life, and these people are wanting to go in there and use the force of government to say you have to do this.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

Just to finish up, I have already quoted from the ethics portion of the American Medical Association. The American Hospital Association has stated that "A health care institution should, based on its assessment of its mission, be able to choose whether or not to perform abortions."

The Association of American Physicians and Surgeons says, "The Federal Government should not discriminate against medical professionals or medical institutions that follow the dictates of conscience or medical judgment."

The American Nurses Association: "Where nurses are placed in situations of compromise that exceed acceptable moral limits or involve violations of the moral standards of the profession, whether in direct patient care or any other form of nursing practice, they may express their conscientious objection to participation."

All this legislation is trying to do is be consistent with all of that, and we are giving the choice and the freedom to those who have a problem with performing these types of procedures.

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I come from a rural community that prides itself in its values and the ability to express those values. Our local health care providers work tirelessly to improve the quality of life and care for the small towns and communities they serve.

It is important to note that many of our rural states and rural health providers have no choice than to rely on public aid for supplying care. We must not limit their ability to serve their communities. We should give them the decision making power that will enable them to better serve their areas while protecting them from discrimination in the law.

Because I believe that it is our local communities that better understand the needs of the people, I strongly support the passage of H.R. 4691, the "Abortion Non-Discrimination Act of 2002."

This bill will provide the necessary protection to health care professionals as they strive to provide quality care to the people they serve.

Mr. SHUSTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 4691, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act. This legislation simply clarifies current law. In 1996, Congress passed and then President Clinton signed into law the existing nondiscrimination statute which protects "health care entities" from being forced by the government to perform abortions. The purpose of the legislation before us today is to clarify that "health care entities" includes all health care organizations, including hospitals.

This bill, despite all the rhetoric we hear from the other side, will not prevent women from obtaining abortions. What this bill does do is say to our hospitals and healthcare personnel that the government will not force them to perform a procedure that is in conflict with their personal moral beliefs. I think it is important to note that most hospitals in this Nation will not even get involved in abortion. That is largely due to the fact the basic function of a hospital is to preserve life not to take it.

I, like many across this Nation, believe that abortion is wrong. Life is a sacred gift from our Creator which should be protected. This, however, is not an abortion debate. This is a debate about allowing individuals to exercise their moral conscience. I cannot believe that there is a single person in this body who would say that we should force someone to perform a procedure that goes against every fiber of their moral and ethical being. It is in this vein, Mr. Chairman, that I urge passage of H.R. 4691.

Mr. FARR of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to voice my opposition to H.R. 4691, The Abortion Non-Discrimination Act, which would radically broaden the ability of any health-care entity to refuse to comply with federal, state, or local law that pertains to abortion. These health-care entities include hospitals, insurance companies, HMO's, and any other similar company; all of which would suddenly have the power to decide at will to override the existing federal provisions in Title X and Medicaid that ensure that all women have access to health information and services.

These entities would have free reign to refuse to provide or pay for abortion services, counseling regarding abortion, and referrals to other providers. In addition, hospitals would have the right to turn away women who are in need of emergency abortions as a life-saving procedure.

The State of California has worked hard to establish laws that protect the right of women to make fully informed medical choices, but H.R. 4691 would threaten these valuable laws that protect a woman's right to choose. These changes would create confusion and chaos regarding what services are available, therefore threatening the women's ability to seek and obtain health care.

The provisions encompassed in H.R. 4691 dramatically endanger women's right to quality, non-judgmental health care, and stand in direct contrast to California's efforts to protect access to information and reproductive services. I urge my fellow members to vote against this dangerous legislation.

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong opposition to H.R. 4691, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act. This deceptively-titled bill is not aimed at ending discrimination but rather at denying critical reproductive services to women across the nation.

This provision would allow health care entities to exempt themselves from existing state and federal laws that ensure access to a number of reproductive services vital to women's health. Supporters claim that the bill is intended to protect the religious and moral beliefs of doctors and health care providers. However, given the broadness of the bill, I must conclude that the underlying intent is to deprive patients of abortion services, coverage, and information regarding their reproductive rights.

Mr. Speaker, with this legislation, Congress risks trampling on state's rights to formulate their own Medicaid policies or use their own funding to ensure a woman's ability to make an informed decision regarding her own health. Under current law, health care providers are only required to supply abortion services to Medicaid patients in cases of rape, incest, or jeopardy of the mother's health. H.R. 4691 would undermine this narrow provision by allowing health care providers to determine what they will and will not do with federal government dollars.

Furthermore, under H.R. 4691, individual states could no longer require that a woman be referred or even advised of her options with regard to abortion and reproductive choices. If this law is passed, Title X funded entities can refuse to simply talk about abortion with patients because requiring them to do so is considered "discrimination." The fact of the matter is that this law discriminates against women everywhere by denying them adequate information and the opportunity to make their own choices.

Supporters of this legislation say they want to preserve freedom of conscience, but they seek to strip from female patients their freedom of choice articulated in Roe v. Wade and the freedom of states to enact policies that ensure all women receive comprehensive information on their options.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote against depriving women of crucial reproductive information; against limiting state's rights to build their own Medicaid framework; against this unacceptable legislation.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in opposition to the misnamed Abortion Non-Discrimination Act. It should really be entitled the First Step Toward Outlawing Abortion Act. At a time when my own state of California is leading the nation in enacting the most progressive laws protecting a woman's right to choose, Republicans in Congress continue to lead their ill-conceived, extremist crusade to stamp out this fundamental freedom.

The Republicans claim that their bill is simply a clarification of existing law. They are wrong. Passage of this legislation would undermine the sensible requirement that pregnant women be given a full explanation of their medical options regarding their pregnancy. Supporters of H.R. 4961 are not trying to clarify the law today, they are trying to inch us closer and closer—through every legislative vehicle they can find—toward a time when abortions are outlawed.

If this bill becomes law, pregnant women that go to a doctor, hospital, clinic, or other health care provider opposed to abortion may well leave without a full understanding of their medical options. Not only is it wrong to deny patients a full disclosure of their medical options, it is unethical and fundamentally un-American.

If this bill becomes law, the federal government will directly interfere with every state's right to structure their Medicaid programs in the way they deem most appropriate. Current law already prohibits Medicaid programs from performing abortions except in strictly limited circumstances. This bill would go even further by overriding the ability of states to ensure that women treated by Medicaid providers are at least told of their full medical options, even if they can't get financial assistance to access those services.

If this bill becomes law, family planning clinics across the country that are funded through the Title X program would no longer be required to give a pregnant woman information about all her medical options. In fact, they could withhold such information even in cases of rape or incest where the option of an abortion may be most appropriate for the woman involved.

Existing law contains a conscience clause protection that assures that providers opposed to abortion do not have to provide them. Therefore, there is no need for this legislation. This bill goes so far as to grant providers who are opposed to abortion the leeway to deny informing their patients of what may be a needed medical option. It's not sensible medicine, nor is it appropriate public health policy. There is absolutely no valid reason that this bill should be enacted.

I urge my colleagues to join with me in opposition to H.R. 4961 and to stand firm in our commitment that women must be provided all of the medical options so that they can make informed, personal decisions about their pregnancies.

Mr. BLUMENAUER. Mr. Speaker, I strongly oppose H.R. 4691 and urge my colleagues who care about women's health, states' rights and the legislative process to vote against this measure. Not only is the underlying bill objectionable, but the House Republican Leadership has forced this bill to the floor without any committee consideration or the possibility for amendments.

This bill puts the health and well-being of American families at risk by permitting any hospitals, health-insurance corporation or HMO to exempt itself from any federal, state, or local law that guarantees women access to abortion services. The language of this bill not only applies to the provision of legal abortion services, but also to the important responsibilities of counseling, payment and referral to other providers. Abortion is a legal medical procedure and women, regardless of whether their hospital or HMO provides actual abortion services, have a right to information about their medical options.

My anti-choice colleagues will make many false claims today on the floor, but the reality is that the federal government is not forcing hospitals or doctors to perform abortions against their will, the American public does not support this type of legislation and this bill is not a mere "clarification" of current law.

The bottom line is that health-care organizations should not be allowed to gag medical providers; women should not be denied necessary and appropriate medical information or services; and Congress should not supersede a state's right to create and enforce its own laws.

I will support the motion to recommit so that we can send this bill back to committee and better address its major flaws.

Mr. TIAHRT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support for H.R. 4691, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act. This is a bill that should be strongly supported by pro-lifers and pro-choicers alike. For it simply clarifies current law to ensure that no health care provider is forced to perform abortions against its will. This body overwhelmingly supported this view in 1996 and President Clinton even signed it into law because we all agreed that those opposed to abortion on religious or moral grounds should not be forced by the government to compromise their beliefs.

This debate is not just about abortion, however, it is about health care and access to health care. If states or the federal government are allowed to discriminate against Catholic hospitals or community health centers that do not wish to provide abortion services, it will have drastic effects. Catholic hospitals and community health centers are the backbone of our health care system and serve those most in need. They already struggle financially for they treat every patient regardless of ability to pay. To withhold much needed funds just because they refuse to perform a service that they are fundamentally opposed to is abominable and will only hurt low-income Americans.

One of the fundamental principles of our nation is that the government cannot impose religious or philosophical beliefs upon its citizens. We have a rich society of different cultures and beliefs. It is un-American and unconscionable to force health care providers to perform abortions that they believe are morally wrong. Join me in voting in favor of this important legislation to ensure that no American is forced to performed abortions against their will.

Mr. TERRY, Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4691, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act.

In 1996, Congress enacted a law prohibiting discrimination against health care professionals, organizations, and facilities that decline to provide abortions on moral and religious grounds. This was done to prevent health care providers from being forced to act against their conscience by performing, training in, or giving referrals for abortion.

Unfortunately, several courts have misinterpreted this law by applying its protections only to individual physicians and training programs. Many hospitals and other health care facilities have been left without sufficient legal protection. For example, in 1997 the Alaska Supreme Court ordered a private hospital to provide abortion even though it went against the ethical standards set by its operating board.

H.R. 4691 would uphold the intent of Congress by clarifying the right of all health care providers to follow their conscience. It would also strengthen current law by ensuring providers cannot be forced to pay for abortion services. Forty-six states, including my home state of Nebraska, have similar conscience protection laws. I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 4691 to ensure health care providers do not have to perform or pay for abortions they believe are morally wrong.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I strongly oppose H.R. 4691, the inappropriately named Abortion Non-Discrimination Act, which would radically alter current law by allowing health care entities to exempt themselves from any federal, state or local law that assures women have access to abortion services, including basic information. This sort of preemption contradicts local policies espoused by this Congress.

This legislation flies in the face of a woman's right to choose as well as her basic right to be informed about her reproductive options. Moreover, H.R. 4691 has the potential to pose a severe threat to efforts to prevent unwanted pregnancies, thus leading to more, not less, abortions. The sweeping nature of this supposedly narrow legislation is staggering.

Family planning programs have been instrumental in helping millions of American women obtain reproductive health care for three decades. H.R. 4691 could essentially "gag" clinic staff from giving pregnant women information and referrals for all their legal options, including adoption, carrying the pregnancy to term and abortion.

There is currently no federal requirement that a health care entity provide abortion services against its will. Furthermore, there is no federal statutory requirement that any individual participate in the provision of reproductive health services if he or she objects. This legislation is therefore not only without merit but completely unnecessary.

I urge my colleagues to vote against H.R. 4691.

Ms. JACKSON-LEE of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong opposition to H.R. 4691. This legislation, the Abortion Non-Discrimination Act of 2002, would essentially allow any health care entity, including hospitals, health insurance companies, HMOS, etc. to exempt themselves from current federal, state and local laws, that assure women have access to abortion services.

If passed, H.R. 4691 would provide a sweeping new exemption from current laws and regulations that gives the women of this country information about, and access to, reproductive health services.

This bill is specifically designed to override state constitutions, laws and local regulations that anti-choice activists have tried to overturn for years. This legislation will override the progress of states' that have worked to assure that women not only have access to reproductive services, but also the right to basic information.

By and large, the federal government does not pay for abortion services. The Hyde amendment to the Medicaid program stipulates that Medicaid clients must have access to abortion services in cases of rape, incest, or when the pregnancy endangers a woman's life. However, states may use their own Medicaid funds to cover abortion services beyond those narrow circumstances if they wish, and in fact, 21 states do so. This bill would preclude these states from enforcing their own laws and constitutional decisions in the area of abortion services for low-income women.

This bill is not limited to abortion services themselves. Under the bill, states would be prohibited from requiring that health-care entities participating in their Medicaid programs provide referrals for abortion services. It would therefore prohibit state from ensuring that patients have all the information they need to make an informed choice about their health care.

In deciding whether to approve a hospital merger, for example, a state could not even consider whether the newly merged hospital system would diminish the community's access to full reproductive health services. This would tie the hands of states trying to ensure that entire communities are not completely without any qualified abortion providers. In fact, supporters of the bill have states that this is exactly their intent.

Current law essentially requires that patients are entitled to full information about their medical options. The anti-choice movement has long sought to deny pregnant women information about their full range of options. H.R. 4691 bill accomplishes this goal by newly categorizing the Title X referral requirement as "discrimination."

Title X has a long-standing referral requirement that while Title X funds cannot be used to pay for abortion services, it must provide women information about the full range of medical care and reproductive options, including abortion. H.R. 4691 would override this, which will have the effect of instituting a gag on health care providers across the country.

Current law already allows individual health care providers to refrain from providing any reproductive services if they object, and that there is no federal statutory requirement that a health-care entity provide abortion services. While proponents tout this as a religious-based "conscience clause" there is no actual requirement in the bill that a health-care entity demonstrate a religious objection. So in actuality, under this bill any health plan, hospital or HMO could opt out of current standards that provide women information about, and access to, abortion services for any conceivable reason.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my Colleagues to oppose this legislation. This bill would disrupt the balance between federal, state and local authority and severely jeopardize reproductive health care and women's health.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. Dan Miller of Florida). All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 546, the bill is considered read for amendment, and the previous question is ordered.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. BROWN OF OHIO

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am, Mr. Speaker, in its current form.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Brown of Ohio moves to recommit the bill, H.R. 4691, to the Committee on Energy and Commerce with instructions to report the same back to the House forthwith with the following amendments:

(b) Effects on Patients and Employees; State Law.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall not be construed as—

(1) authorizing any institution to withhold medically appropriate information or services from a patient;

(2) authorizing any institution to prohibit its employees, contractors, or grantees from discussing or providing all medically appropriate information or services; or

(3) preempting or abrogating a State's right to enforce its constitution, laws, policies, or regulations.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion to recommit be considered as read and printed in the Record.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. Brown) is recognized for 5 minutes in support of his motion.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

This is a motion to recommit in the purest sense of the word and in the most deserving sense of the term, and that is, Mr. Speaker, that this bill was never discussed in the Committee on Commerce to begin with. Normally, on motions to recommit after a bill goes through the process, it comes out of committee, goes to the floor, and people want to make a change or oppose it and they say, let us send it back to committee, let us recommit it so we can make some changes. But since this legislation was never there, it is even more deserving of a recommittal, an affirmative vote on a recommittal motion.

The legislation we are considering today goes far beyond a so-called clarification of existing law, which permits hospitals and doctors to deny women abortion services based on that provider's religious belief. We believe that, too. Current law allows doctors and hospitals to refuse to provide services they are religiously opposed to, as they should, as the law should. But this bill, Mr. Speaker, goes much further than that. It is not about the religious beliefs of providers, it is about denying health care information and services to women, including counseling services. This bill gags doctors, it gags hospitals from referring women to family planning clinics, even those women who have been raped, even those women who are the victims of incest, and even those women whose lives and health are in danger.

Under H.R. 4691, the legislation we are discussing, insurance companies could deny coverage of family planning services, even when medically necessary, regardless of their religious beliefs. It has nothing to do with religion; it has a lot to do with an HMO's bottom line. Relevant State laws would be trumped, even though these laws are designed to protect women. In other words, Mr. Speaker, the State of California, the State of Ohio, the State of Nebraska, the State of Florida might have passed legislation to protect women; this legislation overrides what those State laws wanted to do to provide these counseling services, or to provide these referral services at the hospital or by a physician.

This bill gags doctors, it gags hospitals, regardless of religious belief. It denies women access to medically necessary services regardless of their religious beliefs. Bottom line: it compromises women's health. That is why this bill should not have been on the floor and that is why we should support the motion to recommit.

I am offering the motion to recommit to safeguard against these efforts. The motion provides that H.R. 4691 not authorize any institution to prevent its providers from providing medically appropriate information or services. It does not authorize any institution to withhold medically appropriate information or services from its patients; it does not preempt State laws from enforcing that State's Constitution or that State's laws. This motion makes no change to current law that allows doctors, nurses, and hospitals to refuse to provide abortion services if those services conflict with the doctor's or the hospital's religious beliefs. It does not affect current prohibition against providing abortion services with Federal funds, it simply limits the harm that H.R. 4691 will do.

Imagine, Mr. Speaker, as we discussed before, a woman has been raped or a woman has been a victim of incest. Her life might be in danger, she comes into a hospital. Under this legislation, that hospital simply may not provide her any information, no counseling, no referral; there is a gag on that hospital's ability to do that. Where I come from, reasonable people have differences, honest differences between when abortion should be legal. Should it be legal, should it not be legal, and in what cases should it be legal. But it is only the extreme far right, the leadership of the Republican Party that wants to pass legislation like this where there are no exceptions for rape, for incest, for the life of the woman. The great, great majority of people in this country think a woman who has been raped, who has been a victim of incest, whose life might be in danger comes into a hospital, she should be given information; she should be given counseling if she so chooses; she should be given a referral if she so chooses. This bill, this very rigid bill, inflexible bill, does not allow that. The motion to recommit is important to protect women like that. This motion to recommit is important to preserve the medical standard that guarantees women access to necessary health care.

Mr. Speaker, I ask for a "yes" vote on the motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to claim the time in opposition to the motion, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, Members should reject the motion to recommit, because it does nothing but gut the intent of the underlying bill. The bill before us, as I said earlier, is simple. No one under any circumstances should be forced to perform an abortion against their will. It would be unconscionable for us to force them to do so, but some courts are doing just that, and that is why this clarification must be made.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, the Brown motion states that this bill shall not be construed as authorizing any institution to withhold medically appropriate services from a patient. What are those "services?" They are abortion services, Mr. Speaker.

The problem with the Brown motion is it does not define medically appropriate, it leaves it up to further definition. Perhaps some Attorney General or health commissioner in a government that happens to be pro-abortion would say that is what medically appropriate means, or NARAL might say that is what appropriate means, and we are talking about abortion. That is what is on the table here, and I hope all Members understand that.

This killer motion, will enable the killing of babies. It absolutely reverses the intent of conscience protection and undermines the very law that was passed a few years ago, and takes us further back than we are already right now. I urge Members to vote "no" on this gutting motion.

I want to remind Members that 86 percent of the hospitals in America do not perform abortions. Thank God for that. They protect and preserve and cherish the lives of babies and their mothers—all their patients. They would be compelled under the Brown motion, forced, coerced, or empower others the ability to force them to perform abortions.

This debate is all about conscience. The Bilirakis bill is a great bill, it is an important bill, it is a human rights bill that says conscience means something. We ought to take this step. Vote for it. Vote down this gutting motion.

Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Florida (Mr. WELDON).

Mr. WELDON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Let me just start out by saying, one of the things my father taught me when I was a kid growing up is when people call you names, often the case is they have a problem themselves with the name they are calling you, and we have been called extreme and radical for doing this. I really take offense at that. I believe very strongly all we are trying to do in this bill is to just clarify the intent of the Congress 6 years ago when it originally passed this conscience clause language, and it is the left, it is the pro-abortion left that is trying to do an end run through the courts around this.

Now, this motion to recommit is a classic gutting motion to recommit. It invalidates the entire intent of the bill. It has language that says the statute shall not be construed as authorizing any institution to withhold medically appropriate information or services from a patient. So in other words, we are back to square one. The original intent of the law was it covered hospitals because it referred to them as health care entities, and now we have the courts arguing that hospitals are somehow not health care entities, and they should have to provide these services or referrals.

What they are arguing for here is we have a Catholic hospital, pro-life, they hire a doctor, and the doctor gets in there and he decides he wants to start referring his patients for an abortion. If it is the position of the hospital that that violates their position, they do not want that policy in place, they can enforce it under the conscience clause that we are trying to enact under this law. They have a gutting amendment here that essentially would make it impossible for those institutions, many of which are run by the church, many of which are not run by the church; I want to just underscore this. There are a lot of hospitals that are secular and they do not want to do abortions, and yet what this amendment would effectively do is make it possible for anybody to do abortion counseling, abortion referral, even abortion procedures in hospitals that do not want to do it.

Furthermore, it goes on to say that this law will not abrogate any States rights. So essentially, if the State wants to act very aggressively, statutes that would allow abortion procedures in all hospitals in the State, that this would not be prohibited. This clearly violates the intent of many people in this body, people on both sides of this issue. We had a lot of people who are pro-life and a lot of people who are pro-choice who supported this provision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time has expired.

Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will advise all Members that the telephone system is not working and the cloakrooms are unable to page Members. The bell systems and the whip systems will notify Members of the vote. The Chair will monitor the progress of the vote. Members are reminded that the paging system is currently not operating.

Pursuant to clause 9 of rule XX, the Chair will reduce to 5-minutes the minimum time for any electronic vote on the question of passage.

(2) crime at the local level is exacerbated by the interstate movement of body armor and other assault gear;

(4) recent incidents, such as the murder of San Francisco Police Officer James Guelff by an assailant wearing 2 layers of body armor, a 1997 bank shoot out in north Hollywood, California, between police and 2 heavily armed suspects outfitted in body armor, and the 1997 murder of Captain Chris McCurley of the Etowah County, Alabama Drug Task Force by a drug dealer shielded by protective body armor, demonstrate the serious threat to community safety posed by criminals who wear body armor during the commission of a violent crime;

(5) of the approximately 7,200 officers killed in the line of duty since 1980, more than 30 percent could have been saved by body armor, and the risk of dying from gunfire is 14 times higher for an officer without a bulletproof vest;

(6) the Department of Justice has estimated that 25 percent of State and local police are not issued body armor;

(7) the Federal Government is well-equipped to grant local police departments access to body armor that is no longer needed by Federal agencies; and

(8) Congress has the power, under the interstate commerce clause and other provisions of the Constitution of the United States, to enact legislation to regulate interstate commerce that affects the integrity and safety of our communities.

(c) DEFINITIONS.—In this section:

(1) BODY ARMOR.—The term "body armor" means any product sold or offered for sale, in interstate or foreign commerce, as personal protective body covering intended to protect against gunfire, regardless of whether the product is to be worn alone or is sold as a complement to another product or garment.

The notice shall be in writing and shall state the factual basis for any adverse determination. The Attorney General shall provide the alien with an opportunity to submit evidence to rebut any adverse determination. If the Attorney General reverses all adverse determinations pursuant to such rebuttal, the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved and shall remove the conditional basis of the alien's status (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)) effective as of the second anniversary of the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence.

(ii) CONTINUATION OF CONDITIONAL BASIS IF CERTAIN ADVERSE DETERMINATIONS.—If the Attorney General renders an adverse determination with respect to clause (ii) or (iii) of subparagraph (A), and the eligible alien's rebuttal does not cause the Attorney General to reverse such determination, the Attorney General shall continue the conditional basis of the alien's permanent resident status (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)) for a 2-year period.

(iii) TERMINATION IF ADVERSE DETERMINATION.—If the Attorney General renders an adverse determination with respect to subparagraph (A)(i), and the eligible alien's rebuttal does not cause the Attorney General to reverse such determination, the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved and, subject to subsection (d), shall terminate the permanent resident status of the alien (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained on a conditional basis under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)).

(iv) ADMINISTRATIVE AND JUDICIAL REVIEW.—An alien may seek administrative review of an adverse determination made under subparagraph (A) by filing a petition for such review with the Board of Immigration Appeals. If the Board of Immigration Appeals denies the petition, the alien may seek judicial review. The procedures for judicial review under this clause shall be the same as the procedures for judicial review of a final order of removal under section 242(a)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1252(a)(1)). During the period in which an administrative or judicial appeal under this clause is pending, the Attorney General shall continue the conditional basis of the alien's permanent resident status (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)).

(2) SECOND DETERMINATION.—

(A) AUTHORIZATION TO CONSIDER INVESTMENTS IN OTHER COMMERCIAL ENTERPRISES.—In determining under this paragraph whether to remove a conditional basis continued under paragraph (1)(F)(ii) with respect to an alien, the Attorney General shall consider any capital investment made by the alien in a commercial enterprise (regardless of whether such enterprise is a limited partnership and regardless of whether the alien entered the enterprise after its formation), in the United States, regardless of whether that investment was made before or after the determinations under paragraph (1) and regardless of whether the commercial enterprise is the same as that considered in the determinations under such paragraph, if facts and information with respect to the investment and the enterprise are included in the petition submitted under subparagraph (B).

(B) PETITION.—In order for a conditional basis continued under paragraph (1)(F)(ii) for an eligible alien (and the alien's spouse and children) to be removed, the alien must submit to the Attorney General, during the period described in subparagraph (C), a petition which requests the removal of such conditional basis and which states, under penalty of perjury, the facts and information described in subparagraphs (A) and (B) of section 216A(d)(1) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b(d)(1)) with respect to any commercial enterprise (regardless of whether such enterprise is a limited partnership and regardless of whether the alien entered the enterprise after its formation) which the alien desires to have considered under this paragraph, regardless of whether such enterprise was created before or after the determinations made under paragraph (1).

(C) PERIOD FOR FILING PETITION.—

(i) 90-DAY PERIOD BEFORE SECOND ANNIVERSARY.—Except as provided in clause (ii), the petition under subparagraph (B) must be filed during the 90-day period before the second anniversary of the continuation, under paragraph

(1)(F)(ii), of the conditional basis of the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence.

(ii) DATE PETITIONS FOR GOOD CAUSE.—Such a petition may be considered if filed after such date, but only if the alien establishes to the satisfaction of the Attorney General good cause and extenuating circumstances for failure to file the petition during the period described in clause (i).

(D) TERMINATION OF PERMANENT RESIDENT STATUS FOR FAILURE TO FILE PETITION.—

(i) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an alien with permanent resident status on a conditional basis under paragraph (1)(F)(ii), if no petition is filed with respect to the alien in accordance with subparagraph (B), the Attorney General shall terminate the permanent resident status of the alien (and the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained on a conditional basis under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)) as of the second anniversary of the continuation, under paragraph (1)(F)(ii), of the conditional basis of the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence.

(ii) HEARING IN REMOVAL PROCEEDING.—In any removal proceeding with respect to an alien whose permanent resident status is terminated under clause (i), the burden of proof shall be on the alien to establish compliance with subparagraph (B).

(E) DETERMINATIONS AFTER PETITION.—If a petition is filed by an eligible alien in accordance with subparagraph (B), the Attorney General shall make a determination, within 90 days of the date of such filing, whether—

(i) the petition contains any material misrepresentation in the facts and information alleged in the petition with respect to the commercial enterprises included in such petition;

(ii) all such enterprises, considered together, created full-time jobs for not fewer than 10 United States citizens or aliens lawfully admitted for permanent residence or other immigrants lawfully authorized to be employed in the United States (other than the eligible alien and the alien's spouse, sons, or daughters), and those jobs exist on the date on which the determination is made, except that—

(I) this clause shall apply only if the Attorney General made an adverse determination with respect to the eligible alien under paragraph (1)(A)(ii);

(II) the provisions of subparagraphs (B) and (C) of paragraph (1) shall apply to a determination under this clause in the same manner as they apply to a determination under paragraph (1)(A)(ii); and

(III) if the Attorney General determined under paragraph (1)(A)(ii) that any jobs satisfying the requirement of such paragraph were created, the number of those jobs shall be subtracted from the number of jobs otherwise needed to satisfy the requirement of this clause; and

(iii) considering all such enterprises together, on the date on which the determination is made, the eligible alien is in substantial compliance with the capital investment requirement described in section 216A(d)(1)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b(d)(1)(B)), except that—

(I) this clause shall apply only if the Attorney General made an adverse determination with respect to the eligible alien under paragraph (1)(A)(iii); and

(II) if the Attorney General determined under paragraph (1)(A)(iii) that any capital amount was invested that could be credited towards compliance with the capital investment requirement described in section 216A(d)(1)(B) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b(d)(1)(B)), such amount shall be subtracted from the amount of capital otherwise needed to satisfy the requirement of this clause.

(F) REMOVAL OF CONDITIONAL BASIS IF FAVORABLE DETERMINATION.—If the Attorney General renders an affirmative determination with respect to clauses (ii) and (iii) of subparagraph (E), and if the Attorney General renders a negative determination with respect to clause (i) of such subparagraph, the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved and shall remove the conditional basis of the alien's status (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)) effective as of the second anniversary of the continuation, under paragraph (1)(F)(ii), of the conditional basis of the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence.

(G) REQUIREMENTS RELATING TO ADVERSE DETERMINATIONS.—

(i) NOTICE.—If the Attorney General renders an adverse determination under subparagraph (E), the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved. The notice shall be in writing and shall state the factual basis for any adverse determination. The Attorney General shall provide the alien with an opportunity to submit evidence to rebut any adverse determination. If the Attorney General reverses all adverse determinations pursuant to such rebuttal, the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved and shall remove the conditional basis of the alien's status (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)) effective as of the second anniversary of the continuation, under paragraph (1)(F)(ii), of the conditional basis of the alien's lawful admission for permanent residence.

(ii) TERMINATION IF ADVERSE DETERMINATION.—If the eligible alien's rebuttal does not cause the Attorney General to reverse each adverse determination under subparagraph (E), the Attorney General shall so notify the alien involved and, subject to subsection (d), shall terminate the permanent resident status of the alien (and that of the alien's spouse and children if it was obtained on a conditional basis under section 216A of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1186b)).

(d) HEARING IN REMOVAL PROCEEDING.—Any alien whose permanent resident status is terminated under paragraph (1)(F)(iii) or (2)(G)(ii) of subsection (c) may request a review of such determination in a proceeding to remove the alien. Subtitle B—Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 2002

SEC. 12201. SHORT TITLE.

This subtitle may be cited as the "Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 2002".

SEC. 12202. FINDINGS.

Section 101 of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5601) is amended to read as follows:

"FINDINGS

"Sec. 101. (a) The Congress finds the following:

"(1) Although the juvenile violent crime arrest rate in 1999 was the lowest in the decade, there remains a consensus that the number of crimes and the rate of offending by juveniles nationwide is still too high.

"(2) According to the Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention, allowing 1 youth to leave school for a life of crime and of drug abuse costs society $1,700,000 to $2,300,000 annually.

"(3) One in every 6 individuals (16.2 percent) arrested for committing violent crime in 1999 was less than 18 years of age. In 1999, juveniles accounted for 9 percent of murder arrests, 17 percent of forcible rape arrests, 25 percent of robbery arrest, 14 percent of aggravated assault arrests, and 24 percent of weapons arrests.

"(4) More than ½ of juvenile murder victims are killed with firearms. Of the nearly 1,800 murder victims less than 18 years of age, 17 percent of the victims less than 13 years of age were murdered with a firearm, and 81 percent of the victims 13 years of age or older were killed with a firearm.

"(5) Juveniles accounted for 13 percent of all drug abuse violation arrests in 1999. Between 1990 and 1999, juvenile arrests for drug abuse violations rose 132 percent.

"(6) Over the last 3 decades, youth gang problems have increased nationwide. In the 1970's, 19 States reported youth gang problems. By the late 1990's, all 50 States and the District of Columbia reported gang problems. For the same period, the number of cities reporting youth gang problems grew 843 percent, and the number of counties reporting gang problems increased more than 1,000 percent.

"(7) According to a national crime survey of individuals 12 years of age or older during 1999, those 12 to 19 years old are victims of violent crime at higher rates than individuals in all other age groups. Only 30.8 percent of these violent victimizations were reported by youth to police in 1999.

"(8) One-fifth of juveniles 16 years of age who had been arrested were first arrested before attaining 12 years of age. Juveniles who are known to the juvenile justice system before attaining 13 years of age are responsible for a disproportionate share of serious crimes and violence.

"(9) The increase in the arrest rates for girls and young juvenile offenders has changed the composition of violent offenders entering the juvenile justice system.

"(10) These problems should be addressed through a 2-track common sense approach that addresses the needs of individual juveniles and society at large by promoting—

"(A) quality prevention programs that—

"(i) work with juveniles, their families, local public agencies, and community-based organizations, and take into consideration such factors as whether or not juveniles have been the victims of family violence (including child abuse and neglect); and

"(ii) are designed to reduce risks and develop competencies in at-risk juveniles that will prevent, and reduce the rate of, violent delinquent behavior; and

"(B) programs that assist in holding juveniles accountable for their actions and in developing the competencies necessary to become responsible and productive members of their communities, including a system of graduated sanctions to respond to each delinquent act, requiring juveniles to make restitution, or perform community service, for the damage caused by their delinquent acts, and methods for increasing victim satisfaction with respect to the penalties imposed on juveniles for their acts.

"(11) Coordinated juvenile justice and delinquency prevention projects that meet the needs of juveniles through the collaboration of the many local service systems juveniles encounter can help prevent juveniles from becoming delinquent and help delinquent youth return to a productive life.

"(b) Congress must act now to reform this program by focusing on juvenile delinquency prevention programs, as well as programs that hold juveniles accountable for their acts and which provide opportunities for competency development. Without true reform, the juvenile justice system will not be able to overcome the challenges it will face in the coming years when the number of juveniles is expected to increase by 18 percent between 2000 and 2030.".

"(c) Transformation of an Extension of Protection Into a United States Application.—The holder of an international registration canceled in whole or in part by the International Bureau at the request of the office of origin, under article 6(4) of the Madrid Protocol, may file an application, under section 1 or 44 of this Act, for the registration of the same mark for any of the goods and services to which the cancellation applies that were covered by an extension of protection to the United States based on that international registration. Such an application shall be treated as if it had been filed on the international registration date or the date of recordal of the request for extension of protection with the International Bureau, whichever date applies, and, if the extension of protection enjoyed priority under section 67 of this title, shall enjoy the same priority. Such an application shall be entitled to the benefits conferred by this subsection only if the application is filed not later than 3 months after the date on which the international registration was canceled, in whole or in part, and only if the application complies with all the requirements of this Act which apply to any application filed pursuant to section 1 or 44.

Special notice of the requirement for such affidavit shall be attached to each certificate of extension of protection.

"(c) NOTIFICATION.—The Director shall notify the holder of the international registration who files 1 of the affidavits of the Director's acceptance or refusal thereof and, in case of a refusal, the reasons therefor.

"SEC. 73. INCONTESTABILITY.

"The period of continuous use prescribed under section 15 for a mark covered by an extension of protection issued under this title may begin no earlier than the date on which the Director issues the certificate of the extension of protection under section 69, except as provided in section 74.

"SEC. 74. RIGHTS OF EXTENSION OF PROTECTION.

Section 1. Short title and table of contents

Section 1 provides that the short title of the Act shall be the 21st Century Department of Justice Appropriations Authorization Act, as well as the Table of Contents.

DIVISION A—21ST CENTURY DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT

TITLE I—AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 2002

Section 101 authorizes appropriations to carry out the work of the various components of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2002. The structure of section 101 mirrors the organization of the annual Commerce-Justice-State (CJS) appropriations bill and the President's budget request. The section authorizes the appropriations of amounts requested by the President in most accounts and as enacted in Public Law 107-77. This provision is similar to section 101 of the House bill. The accounts, and the activities and components that each would fund, are as follows:

General Administration—$92,668,000.—For the leadership offices of the Department (including the offices of the Attorney General and Deputy Attorney General) and the Justice Management Division, Executive Support Program, Intelligence Policy, Office of Professional Responsibility, and General Administration.

Administrative Review and Appeals—$173,647,000.—For the Executive Office for Immigration Review and the Office of the Pardon Attorney.

Office of Inspector General—$50,735,000.—For the investigation of allegations of violations of criminal and civil statutes, regulations, and ethical standards by Department employees, and for the new position of Deputy Inspector General to oversee the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This amount is $10 million above the President's request. The IG's Office has been severely downsized over the last several years from approximately 460 to 360 full-time equivalents. Oversight is a priority and this level of funding should get the IG back on the path of meeting the audit and oversight needs of the Department. The Committee expects that the OIG will substantially increase its oversight of the FBI, INS, and the Department's grant programs.

General Legal Activities—$549,176,000.—For the conduct of the legal activities of the Department. This includes the Office of Solicitor General, Tax Division, Criminal Division, Civil Division, Environment and Natural Resources Division, Civil Rights Division, Office of Legal Counsel, Interpol, Legal Activities Office Automation, and Office of Dispute Resolution. The authorization includes not less than $4,000,000 to augment the investigation and prosecution of denaturalization and deportation cases involving alleged Nazi war criminals.

Antitrust Division—$140,973,000.—For decreasing anticompetitive behavior among U.S. businesses and increasing the competitiveness of the national and international business environment.

United States Attorneys—$1,353,968,000.—For the 94 U.S. Attorneys and their offices and the Executive Office of U.S. Attorneys. The U.S. Attorneys represent the United States in the vast majority of criminal and civil cases handled by the Justice Department. The authorization includes not less than $10,000,000 to augment the investigation and prosecution of intellectual property crimes, including software counterfeiting crimes and crimes identified in the No Electronic Theft (NET) Act (Public Law 105-147).

Federal Bureau of Investigation—$3,524,864,000.—For the detection, investigation, and prosecution of crimes against the United States. The FBI is also authorized by Executive Order to protect against foreign intelligence and international terrorist activities and, in certain circumstances, to collect foreign intelligence.

United States Marshals Service—$648,696,000.—To protect the Federal courts and its personnel and to ensure the effective operation of the Federal judicial system, of which no more than $15,000,000 may be used for construction.

Federal Prison System—$4,622,152,000.—For the administration, operation, and maintenance of Federal penal and correctional institutions.

Federal Prison Detention—$706,182,000.—For the support of U.S. prisoners in non-Federal institutions, as authorized by 18 U.S.C. 4013(a).

Drug Enforcement Agency—$1,481,783,000.—To enforce the controlled substance laws and regulations of the United States and to recommend and support nonenforcement programs aimed at reducing the availability of illicit controlled substances on the domestic and international markets.

Immigration and Naturalization Service—$3,499,854,000.—For the administration and enforcement of the laws relating to immigration, naturalization, and alien registration, of which no more than $2,739,695,000 for salaries and expenses and border affairs, no more than $631,745,000 for salaries and expenses of citizenship and benefits, and no more than $128,454,000 for construction.

Fees and Expenses of Witnesses—$156,145,000.—For fees and expenses associated with providing witness testimony on behalf of the United States, expert witnesses, and private counsel for Government employees who have been sued, charged, or subpoenaed for actions taken while performing their official duties.

Interagency Crime and Drug Enforcement—$338,577,000.—For the detection, investigation, and prosecution of individuals involved in organized crime drug trafficking.

Foreign Claims Settlement Commission—$1,136,000.—To adjudicate claims of U.S. nationals against foreign governments under jurisdiction conferred by the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949, as amended, and other authorizing legislation.

Community Relations Service (CRS)—$9,269,000.—To assist communities in preventing violence and resolving conflicts arising from racial and ethnic tensions and to develop the capacity of such communities to address these conflicts without external assistance. CRS activities are conducted in accordance with title X of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.

Assets Forfeiture Fund—$22,949,000.—To provide a stable source of resources to cover the costs of the asset seizure and forfeiture program, including the costs of seizing, evaluating, inventorying, maintaining, protecting, advertising, forfeiting, and disposing of property.

Section 102. Specific sums authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003

Section 102 authorizes appropriations to carry out the work of the various components of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2003. The conferees added this section to the conference report to reflect the President's budget request for fiscal year 2003, which was released after passage of the House and Senate bills. There are authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 2003, to carry out the activities of the Department of Justice (including any bureau, office, board, division, commission, subdivision, unit, or other component thereof), the following sums:

School Compliance with INS Regulations: Designated School Officials (DSO) Certification. The conferees strongly endorse a plan for the INS to implement after January 31, 2003, a comprehensive training program for DSOs. This program should educate DSOs on their professional responsibilities with regards to IIRIRA, the USA PATRIOT Act and SEVIS and should employ a testing mechanism to verify this understanding. In addition, the training system should include a mechanism for creating a "professional register" of DSOs who have completed the requisite training and are, therefore, eligible to perform this vital function. It is recommended that the program be outsourced to a private-sector company with the ability to implement such a program effectively, rapidly and at little or no cost to the Federal Government.

CRS activities are conducted in accordance with title X of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The increased authorization provided by this section is intended to support the addition of six full-time employees to accommodate the expansion of the Community Relations Service's efforts to address heightened tension and potential for conflict in many communities in the wake of the September 11, 2001 attacks on the United States.

This section authorizes the Attorney General to transfer 200 additional Assistant U.S. Attorneys from among the six litigating divisions at the Justice Department's headquarters (Main Justice) in Washington, DC., to the various U.S. Attorneys offices around the country. Vacant positions resulting from transfers pursuant to this section will be terminated. This section is intended to raise the productivity of Washington—based lawyers, who litigate criminal and civil cases across the nation for the Justice Department, by moving them to the field. Litigating attorneys for the Government are most effective in the Federal judicial district where their cases are pending. The appointment authorization is at the discretion of the Attorney General. This provision is identical to section 101 of the Senate bill and similar to section 102 of the House bill.

Section 104. Authorization of Additional Assistant United States Attorneys for project safe neighborhoods

This section authorizes an additional Assistant United States Attorney in each of the 94 U.S. Attorney Offices to implement part of the Administration's Project Safe Neighborhoods proposal to reduce school gun violence across the Nation. The Attorney General is prohibited from compensating employed attorneys who are not duly licensed and authorized to practice under the law of a State, U.S. territory, or the District of Columbia. And reimbursement payments to governmental units of the Department of Justice, other Federal entities, or State or local governments are limited to uses permitted by the authority permitting such reimbursement payment.

(2) Refrains from adhering to, enforcing, applying, or complying with any other judicial determination or other statute, rule, regulation, program, or policy within the responsibility of the Attorney General;

(3) Decides to contest in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding, the constitutionality of any provision of any Federal statute, rule, regulation, program, policy, or other law;

(4) Refrains from defending or asserting, in any judicial, administrative, or other proceeding, the constitutionality of any provision of any Federal statute, rule, regulation, program, policy, or other law, or not to appeal or request review of any judicial, administrative, or other determination adversely affecting the constitutionality of such provision when the constitutionality of the provision is challenged; or

(5) When the Attorney General approves the settlement or compromise of any claim, suit or other action against the United States for more than $2,000,000 (excluding prejudgment interest) or for certain injunctive relief against the Government that is likely to exceed three years.

Each report, which is subject to certain time and content requirements, must be submitted to the Majority and Minority Leaders of the Senate, the Speaker of the House, House Majority Leader, House Minority Leader, and the Chairman and ranking minority member of the Senate and House Committees on the Judiciary, the Senate Legal Counsel and the General Counsel of the House of Representatives. Section 202 also includes a number of conforming amendments.

It also requires the Attorney General to notify Congress in writing of any civil asset forfeiture award greater than $500,000. This section further makes several clerical and technical amendments to title 28, United States Code. In addition, this section adds authority to ensure that no inference is created that the Government is liable for interest on certain retroactive payments made by the Department of Justice, and to improve financial systems and debt-collection activities. This provision is identical to section 204 of the Senate bill and similar to section 205 of the House bill.

Section 205. Oversight; waste, fraud, and abuse within the Department of Justice

Section 205 amends section 529 of title 28, United States Code, to require the Attorney General to submit an annual report to the House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary describing:

Every grant, cooperative agreement, or programmatic services contract that was made, entered into, awarded, or supplemented in the immediately preceding fiscal year by or on behalf of the Office of Justice Programs (other than one made to a governmental entity, pursuant to a statutory formula); and

A report on every grant, cooperative agreement, or programmatic services contract made, entered into, awarded, or supplemented by or on behalf of the Office of Justice Programs that was terminated or that otherwise ended in the immediately preceding fiscal year (other than one made to a governmental entity, pursuant to a statutory formula).

Section 302. Technical amendments to Title 18 of the United States Code

Section 302 makes several minor clarifying amendments to title 18, United States Code. Section 302(3) moves a comma that became the focus of a statutory construction question in Crandon v. United States.[1] This provision is identical to section 302 of the Senate and House bills.

Section 303. Required submission of proposed authorization of appropriations for the Department of Justice for fiscal years 2004 and 2005

Section 303 requires the President to submit a Department of Justice authorization bill for fiscal years 2004 and 2005 to the House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary when the President submits his fiscal year 2004 budget request. This authorization bill should contain any recommended additions, changes or modifications to existing authorities that may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Department. Any such addition, change, or modification should be accompanied by a description of the change and the justification for the change. This provision is similar to section 303 of the Senate and House bills.

House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary detailing, among other things, as:

(1) The kind and number of orders or extensions applied for to authorize the use of the DCS 1000 program (or any subsequent version of such program);

(2) The period of interceptions authorized by the order, and the number and duration of any extensions of the order;

(3) The offense specified in the order or application, or extension of an order;

(4) The number and nature of the facilities affected;

(5) The identity of the applying investigative or law enforcement agency making the application for an order; and

(6) The specific persons authorizing the use of the DCS 1000 program (or any subsequent version of such program).

This provision is identical to section 305 of the Senate bill and is similar to section 306 of the House bill.

Section 306. Study of allocation of litigating attorneys

Section 306 requires the Attorney General to report to Congress within 180 days of enactment of this bill on the allocation of funds, attorneys, and other personnel, per-attorney workloads for each office of U.S. Attorney and each division of the Department of Justice. This provision is identical to section 306 of the Senate bill.

Section 307. Use of Truth-in-Sentencing and Violent Offender Incarceration Grants

Section 307 provides States with flexibility to use existing Truth-In-Sentencing and Violent Offender Incarceration Grants to account for juveniles being housed in adult prison facilities. This provision is identical to section 307 of the Senate bill.

Section 308. Authority of the Department of Justice Inspector General

Section 308 would amend Section 8E of the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App.) to provide explicit statutory authority for the Office of the Inspector General ("OIG") to investigate all allegations of criminal or administrative misconduct by DOJ employees, including FBI personnel. The OIG is also authorized to refer certain matters to the FBI Office of Professional Responsibility or to the internal affairs office of the appropriate component of the Department. The Attorney General is directed to promulgate regulations implementing this OIG authority. The section would make clear that the OIG may investigate alleged misconduct by DOJ component heads.

For many years, the FBI was excluded from OIG jurisdiction and the FBI's own internal Office of Professional Responsibility had sole authority to investigate FBI personnel misconduct, unless the Attorney General made an exception. The FBI's exclusive domain to investigate its own misconduct was unique in the Department and created the appearance of a conflict of interest. On July 11, 2001, Attorney General Ashcroft issued a new rule expanding the OIG's jurisdiction over the FBI. This section is consistent with, and codifies, the Attorney General's new rule.

This provision is similar to section 308 of the Senate bill.

Section 309. Review of the Department of Justice

To ensure that the OIG has the necessary structure and resources to effectively assume its new jurisdiction over the FBI and that the Congress is fully informed of such needs, this section requires the Inspector General to: (1) appoint an official to help supervise and coordinate oversight operations and programs of the FBI during the transition period; (2) conduct a comprehensive study of the FBI and report back to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees with a plan for auditing and evaluating various parts of the FBI (including information technology) and for effective continued OIG oversight; and (3) report back to the House and Senate Judiciary Committees on whether an Inspector General for the FBI should be established. The section would add a requirement to report on FBI administrative changes to implement the OIG authority, on different internal investigative methods used by DOJ components and steps to bring uniformity, and on whether recommended guidelines should be developed for the discipline of DOJ personnel for misconduct. This provision is similar to section 309 of the Senate bill and section 304 of the House bill.

Section 310.—Authorization of appropriations

The conferees agreed to add this section to authorize appropriations for the OIG and the FBI Office of Professional Responsibility for fiscal year 2003.

Subsection (a) would authorize $2,000,000 to be appropriated to the Department of Justice for fiscal year 2003 for three purposes: first, to increase the staffing level of the OIG by 25 full-time employees to conduct an increased number of audits, inspections, and investigations of alleged misconduct by FBI employees; second, to fund additional audit coverage of the grant programs administered by the Office of Justice Programs of the Department of Justice; and third, to conduct special reviews of FBI efforts to implement recommendations made by the OIG in reports on alleged misconduct by the Bureau.

Subsection (b) would authorize $1,700,000 to be appropriated to the FBI for fiscal year 2003 to increase the staffing level of the FBI Office of Professional Responsibility by 10 full-time special agents and 4 full-time support employees.

Section 311. Report on threats and assaults against Federal law enforcement officers, United States judges, United States officials and their families

Section 311 repeals a burdensome reporting requirement on the compilation of statistics relating to intimidation of Government employees and requires the Attorney General to report to Congress not later than 45 days after the end of the fiscal year 2002 on the number of investigations and prosecutions on threats and assaults against Federal law enforcement officers, U.S. judges, U.S. officials and their families. This provision is similar to section 311 of the Senate bill and the repeal provision is identical to the repeal provision in section 301 of the House bill.

Section 312. Additional Federal judgeships

Section 312 authorizes eight new permanent judgeships as follows: five judgeships in the Southern District of California, two judgeships in the Western District of Texas, and one judgeship in the Western District of North Carolina. It would also convert four temporary judgeships to permanent judgeships—one each in the Central District of Illinois, the Southern District of Illinois, the Northern District of New York, and the Eastern District of Virginia. Additionally, section 312 creates seven new temporary judgeships, one each in the Northern District of Alabama, the District of Arizona, the Central District of California, the Southern District of Florida, the District of New Mexico, the Western District of North Carolina, and the Eastern District of Texas. Finally, it extends the temporary judgeship in the Northern District of Ohio for five years.

TITLE IV—VIOLENCE AGAINST WOMEN

Section 401. Short title

Section 401 establishes the "Violence Against Women Office Act" as the short title.

Section 402. Establishment of Violence Against Women Office

Section 402 specifies that Part T of Title I of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act of 1968 (42 U.S.C. §3796gg et seq.) will be amended by the following insertion, and changes the existing paragraph numbers to incorporate the amendment.

Section 2002 creates a separate and independent Violence Against Women Office (hereinafter the "Office") in the Department of Justice, under the general authority of the Attorney General. Section 2002 also affirms that the Office has the sole jurisdiction over all the duties and functions delineated for the Director in Section 2004, and that the Office is solely responsible for coordination with other departments, agencies, or offices of all activities authorized or undertaken under the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (Title VI of Public 103-322) and the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 (Division B of Public Law 106-386). For instance, since its inception in 1995, the Violence Against Women Office has handled and coordinated the Department of Justice's legal and policy issues regarding violence against women—everything from enforcing protection orders across state lines to issuing annual reports on stalking. The jurisdiction provision ensures that coordination such as this will continue.

In addition, the Violence Against Women Office also works with other federal agencies, such as the Department of Housing and Urban Development, the Department of Health and Human Services, and the Immigration and Naturalization Service about federal policies, programs, statutes, and regulations that impact violence against women such as immigration procedures for battered immigrant women, public housing assistance for battered women and their children, and women's health programs. Pursuant to this jurisdiction section, inter-department coordination such as this will continue.

Section 2003. Director of Violence Against Women Office

Section 2003 establishes that the Office shall be headed by a Director appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. In addition, the Director is prohibited from other employment during service as Director. This provision specifies that compensation for the Director shall not exceed the rate payable for Level V of the Executive Schedule under §5316 of Title 5, United States Code.

Section 2004. Duties and functions of director of Violence Against Women Office

Section 2004 delineates the duties and functions of the director and correspondingly, the jurisdiction of the Office as set forth in §2002 and they are as follows:

(5) Carrying out the functions of the Department of Justice under the Violence Against Women Act of 1994 (Title IV of Public Law 103-322) and the Violence Against Women Act of 2000 (Division B of Public Law 106-386) including with respect to those functions—

(A) the development of policy, protocols, and guidelines;

(B) the development and management of grant programs and other programs, and the provision of technical assistance under such programs;

(C) the award and termination of grants, cooperative agreements, and contracts.

(6) Providing technical assistance, coordination, and support to—

(A) other components of the Department of Justice, in efforts to develop policy and to enforce Federal laws relating to violence against women, including the litigation of civil and criminal actions relating to enforcing such laws;

(B) other Federal, State, local and tribal government agencies, in efforts to develop policy, provide technical assistance and improve coordination among agencies carrying out efforts to eliminate violence against women, including Indian or indigenous women; and (C) grantees, in efforts to combat violence against women and to provide support and assistance to victims of such violence.

(7) Exercising such other powers and functions as may be vested in the Director pursuant to this part or by delegation of the Attorney General; and

(8) Establishing such rules, regulations, guidelines and procedures as are necessary to carry out any function of the Office.

Pursuant to §2004(3), the Director and the Office will continue to participate in task forces, commissions, committees, working groups such as the Violence Against Women Coordinating Council in the Department of Justice, Office of Justice Programs Indian Issues Working Group, and the Department of Defense Task Force on Domestic Violence.

Section 2005. Staff of Violence Against Women Office

Section 2005 requires the Attorney General to ensure that the Office receives adequate staff to support the Director in carrying out the responsibilities, duties and functions.

Section 2006. Authorizations of appropriations

Section 2006 authorizes the appropriations of such sums as may be necessary to carry out this title for each fiscal year until fiscal year 2005, the year through which the Violence Against Women Act is authorized.

Sec. 2503. Authorization of funds for DEA police training in South and Central Asia

Section 2503 authorizes not less than $5 million for fiscal year 2003 to the Attorney General for regional antidrug training by the Drug Enforcement Administration for law enforcement entities in South and Central Asia.

Sec. 2504. United States-Thailand drug prosecutor exchange program

Section 2504 authorizes the Attorney General to establish an exchange program in which prosecutors, judges, or policymakers from Thailand participate in an exchange program to observe federal prosecutors to learn about the various rules and procedures used in the United States to prosecute violations of federal criminal narcotics laws. The section authorizes $75,000 for fiscal years 2003 and 2004.

TITLE III—SAFEGUARDING THE INTEGRITY OF THE CRIMINAL JUSTICE SYSTEM

Sec. 3001. Increasing the penalty for using physical force to tamper with witnesses, victims, or informants

Section 3001 would increase the statutory maximum sentence for witness tampering that involves the use of physical force. Under current law, a defendant convicted of using physical force to tamper with a witness, victim or informant faces a maximum sentence of 10 years. This section would increase the maximum for the use or attempted use of force to 20 years, which is the same sentence available for a defendant who tampers with a witness by attempted murder. The increased penalty is justified because the use of physical force is often comparably egregious to attempted murder, such as where the victim, witness or informant is severely beaten, even though the government cannot prove the specific intent to commit murder. Judges should have the authority to sentence accordingly. This section would also add a provision for conspiracy cases making the maximum sentence for conspiracy the same as the maximum sentence for the underlying substantive offense. This provision is similar to section 4001 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 3002. Correction of aberrant statutes to permit imposition of both a fine and imprisonment

This section would allow the court to impose both a fine and imprisonment under certain aberrant statutes that presently permit the imposition of only one of these punishments, but not both. The statutes at issue are 18 U.S.C. §401 (criminal contempt); 18 U.S.C. §1705 (destruction of letter boxes); 18 U.S.C. §1916 (unauthorized employment or disposition of lapsed appropriations); 18 U.S.C. §2234 (willfully exceeding authority in executing a search warrant); 18 U.S.C. §2235 (maliciously procuring and executing a search warrant); and 28 U.S.C. §§636(e)(2) & (3) (criminal contempt by magistrates). Although the general policy of the Sentencing Reform Act of 1984 that courts should have multiple sentencing options, see 18 U.S.C. §3551(b) ("A sentence to pay a fine may be imposed in addition to any other sentence."), these statutes stand as an anomalous exception to that policy, see United States v. Versaglio, 85 F.3d 943, 946–47 (2d Cir. 1996) (notwithstanding §3551(b), court many not impose both imprisonment and a fine under §401); United States v. Holloway, 991 F.2d 370, 373 (7th Cir. 1993) (same).

Of the statutes that limit the court to a single sentencing option, only section 401 has generated case law concerning the effect of its disjunctive sentencing provisions. These cases have resulted in windfalls for undeserving defendants when judges who are unaware of the unusual restriction on their sentencing authority mistakenly impose an illegal sentence of both a fine and imprisonment. If the defendant tenders payment of the fine before the error is corrected, the sentence is deemed to have been fully satisfied and the term of imprisonment must be vacated. See In re Bradley, 318 U.S. 50 (1943); United States v. Catalano, 1996 WL 387220 (2d Cir. July 11, 1996); Versaglio, 85 F.3d at 948; United States v. Holmes, 822 F.2d 481 (5th Cir. 1987); United States v. Sampogne, 533 F.2d 766, 767 (2d Cir. 1976). In effect, the defendant can buy immunity from imprisonment by immediately paying the fine and then filing an appeal challenging only the prison term. Even where it is clear that the sentencing court would have imposed a prison term rather than a fine if it had correctly understood its options, the defendant must be allowed to go free, with no possibility of the case being remanded for resentencing. While these decisions may be compelled by the plain wording of the statute, their outcomes are hardly satisfactory. As Chief Justice Stone remarked in his dissenting opinion in Bradley, it is unjust that "the choice rests with the offender rather than with the court whether he shall be punished by fine or by imprisonment, either of which alone the court could have lawfully imposed; and that by payment of the fine, imposed and accepted under mistake of law . . . he may irrevocably escape punishment by imprisonment." 318 U.S. at 53; see also Holmes, 822 F.2d at 505 (Brown, J., dissenting) ("The Constitution does not require that sentencing should be a game in which the wrong move by a judge means immunity for the prisoner.").

There is no sound reason to limit a court's sentencing authority under the statutes at issue to only a fine or imprisonment. No legislative history apparently exists to explain the reasons for these disjunctive sentencing provisions. Indeed, the Senate Judiciary Committee has previously remarked that this feature of section 401 was probably unintended and proposed correcting it in the Criminal Code Reform Act of 1979. See S. Rep. No. 96–553 at 355 (96th Cong. 2d Sess.). The correction is long overdue. The proposed amendment would therefore insert the phrase "or both" after the language authorizing a fine or imprisonment in the affected statutes. This section is identical to section 4002 of the Senate-passed bill.

This section would create a new provision, to be codified at 18 U.S.C. §3296, which would extend the statute of limitations for counts dismissed pursuant to a plea agreement when the defendant's guilty plea is subsequently vacated. There have been cases where a defendant is indicted on one set of charges and pleads guilty to lesser counts pursuant to a plea bargain, but then later succeeds in getting the guilty plea vacated. If the plea is vacated after the statute of limitations on the original set of charges has run, courts have held that those charges cannot be reinstated and that the case is time-barred. Thus, the defendant can no longer be prosecuted even though the government acted with all reasonable diligence in bringing the case. See United States v. Midgley, 142 F.3d 174, 178–80 (3d Cir. 1998); United States v. Podde, 105 F.3d 813 (2d Cir. 1995). The bill would close this loophole by giving the government 60 days after the order vacating the defendant's plea becomes final to move to reinstate any charges dismissed pursuant to a plea agreement. This approach is analogous to that of 18 U.S.C. §3288, which grants the government a grace period to obtain a new indictment when counts are dismissed after the expiration of the statute of limitations.

The new section 3296 would not prevent the court from considering any defense other than statute of limitations to the reinstated charges. Thus, for example, defendants who contend that their ability to defend against the reinstated counts has been irreparably prejudiced by the passage of time retain their ability to bring a constitutional speedy trial claim, see Barker v. Wingo, 407 U.S. 514 (1972), as well as any other defenses to the prosecution they would otherwise have. This provision is identical to section 4003 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 3004. Appeals from certain dismissals

This section clarifies that 18 U.S.C. §3731 authorizes an appeal by the United States, consistent with the Double Jeopardy clause, whenever a district court enters an order dismissing or striking part of an indictment or information. Section 3731 confers broad authority on the United States to appeal orders of district courts that dismiss an indictment or information either in whole or as to "any one or more counts." The statute was designed to permit the United States to appeal virtually all adverse rulings in criminal cases, when not precluded from doing so by the Double Jeopardy Clause of the Constitution, and contains a final sentence stating that the "provisions of this section shall be liberally construed to effectuate its purposes." As a result of this language, the statute has generally been generously interpreted to allow government appeals, even when its literal language does not clearly extend to the case, such as where a district court has dismissed only a portion of a count such as a predicate act in a RICO count or an overt act in a conspiracy count. See, e.g., United States v. Levasseur, 846 F.2d 786 (1st Cir. 1988) (appeal held to lie where predicate acts were stricken from a RICO count). This approach is consistent with the Supreme Court's observation that section 3731 permits "an appeal from an order dismissing only a portion of a count." Sanabria v. United States, 437 U.S. 54, 69 n.23 (1978). However, one federal circuit has held that section 3731 does not permit any government appeals from the dismissal of only part of a count. See United States v. Louisiana Pacific Corporation, 106 F.3d 345 (10th Cir. 1997). In other cases, appellate review of orders dismissing predicate acts or overt acts has been denied where the dismissed acts could not themselves have been charged in separate counts. See United States v. Terry, 5 F.3d 874 (5th Cir. 1993); United States v. Tom, 787 F.2d 65 (2d Cir. 1986).

It is time to resolve these conflicting results definitively. The reach of section 3731 should clearly be extended to orders dismissing portions of counts. Although the Solicitor General, who must approve all appeals by the United States to a court of appeals, only seldom authorizes appeals from partial dismissals of counts in criminal cases, there is no reason not to permit the government to appeal when the issue involved is important and determined by the Solicitor General to be worthy of presentation to a higher court. Indeed, there are some cases where the dismissal of a predicate act or overt act may substantially weaken the government's ability to prove its case. The proposed amendment would therefore insert the phrase "or any part thereof" in section 3731 so as to make clear that dismissals of any part of a count are subject to appeal by the United States in appropriate circumstances. This provision is identical to section 4004 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 3005. Clarification of length of supervised release terms in controlled substance cases

This section resolves a conflict in the circuits as to the permissible length of supervised release terms in controlled substance cases. Under 18 U.S.C. 3583(b), "[e]xcept as otherwise provided," the maximum authorized terms of supervised release are 5 years for Class A and B felonies, 3 years for Class C and D felonies, and 1 year for Class E felonies and certain misdemeanors. The drug trafficking offenses in 21 U.S.C. §§841 and 960 prescribe special supervised release terms, however, that are longer than those applicable generally under section 3583(b). Those longer terms, which may include lifetime supervised release, were enacted in 1986 in the same Act that inserted the introductory phrase "Except as otherwise provided" in section 3583(b). Because of this clear legislative history and intent, three courts of appeals have held that section 3583(b) does not limit the length of supervised release that may be imposed for a violation of 21 U.S.C. §§841 or 960 when a greater term is there provided. United States v. LeMay, 952 F.2d 995, 998 (8th Cir. 1991); United States v. Eng, 14 F.3d 165, 172–3 (2d Cir. 1994); United States v. Garcia, 112 F.3d 395 (9th Cir. 1997). Two courts of appeals, however, have reached the opposite result, holding that the length of a supervised release term that can be imposed for controlled substance cases is limited by 18 U.S.C. §3583(b). United States v. Gracia, 983 F.2d 625, 630 (5th Cir. 1993); United States v. Kelly, 974 F.2d 22, 24–25 (5th Cir. 1992); United States v. Good, 25 F.3d 218 (4th Cir. 1994).

Although the issue has not arisen with frequency, the conflict is entrenched and should be dealt with definitively. Accordingly, the amendment would add the words "Notwithstanding section 3583 of title 18" to the title 21 controlled substance offenses in the parts of those statutes dealing with supervised release to make clear that the longer terms there prescribed control over the general provision in section 3583. Of course, the Sentencing Guidelines would continue to govern the permissible length of supervised release terms under the amended statutes. This provision is identical to section 4005 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 3006. Authority of court to impose a sentence of probation or supervised release when reducing a sentence of imprisonment in certain cases

This section would confer express authority on courts under section 3582(c)(1)(A), when exercising the power to reduce a term of imprisonment for extraordinary and compelling reasons, to impose a sentence of probation or supervised release with or without conditions. Such added flexibility is consistent with the purposes for which this statute was designed and will likely facilitate its use in appropriate cases.

Under 18 U.S.C. 3582(c)(1)(A), a court is authorized, on motion of the Bureau of Prisons and consistent with the purposes of sentencing in 18 U.S.C. 3553, to "reduce the term of imprisonment" upon a finding that "extraordinary and compelling reasons" warrant such a reduction. This limited authority has been generally utilized when a defendant sentenced to imprisonment becomes terminally ill or develops a permanently incapacitating illness not present at the time of sentencing. In such circumstances, the situation of a prisoner (e.g., one suffering from a contagious debilitating disease), may make a court reluctant simply to release the prisoner back into society unless another sentencing option such as home confinement as a condition of supervised release or probation can be imposed. Presently, however, it is doubtful whether a court can order such a sentence since section 3582(c)(1)(A) speaks only in terms of reducing "the term of imprisonment," not imposing in its stead a lesser type of sentence. Cf. Fed. R. Crim. P. 35(b), which gives a court the power to "reduce a sentence" to reflect substantial assistance. The proposed language also makes it clear that any new term of supervised release or probation cannot be longer than the unserved portion of the original prison term, as it is not intended that this provision be used to increase the total amount of time that a person's liberty is restricted. This provision is identical to section 4006 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 3007. Clarification that making restitution is a proper condition of supervised release

This section would remedy an ambiguity relating to restitution as a condition of supervised release. Under 18 U.S.C. 3583(c) and (e), the court is authorized to consider various sentencing factors set forth in 18 U.S.C. 3553 as a basis for imposing restitution as a condition of supervised release or for revoking or modifying the conditions of supervised release. Supervised release is among the purposes of sentencing enumerated in section 3553, in paragraph (a)(7), but is not among the factors enumerated in section 3583(c) and (e). However, 18 U.S.C. 3583(c) also authorizes the court to impose any condition of supervised release that is an authorized condition of probation under 18 U.S.C. 3563(b), and making restitution is among those conditions (see section 3564(b)(2)). Thus, it appears clear that a court has authority to impose a restitution condition upon a term of supervised release. But the absence of a reference to section 3553(a)(7) in the revocation subsection of section 3583 raises a question whether, even though it is an authorized condition of supervised release, a court has authority to revoke or modify the term for willful failure to make restitution. Such authority is probably implicit and was surely intended by Congress. See United States v. Payan, 992 F.2d 1387, 1395–96 (5th Cir. 1993). This amendment would provide a reference to section 3553(a)(7) in the supervised release statute and remove any ambiguity in this regard. Of course, even under the amended statute, a court could not revoke or modify the defendant's supervised release for failure to pay restitution unless the defendant had the resources to pay and willfully refused to do so. See Bearden v. Georgia, 461 U.S. 660 (1983); Payan, 992 F.2d at 1396–97. This provision is identical to section 4007 of the Senate bill.

TITLE IV—CRIMINAL LAW TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS ACT OF 2002

Sec. 4001. Short title

This section provides that the short title of the act shall be the "Criminal Law Technical Amendments Act of 2002." This provision is similar to section 5001 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 4002. Technical amendments relating to criminal law and procedure

This section makes over 60 separate technical changes to various criminal statutes by correcting missing and incorrect words, margins, punctuation, redundancies, outmoded fine amounts, cross references, and other technical and clerical errors. This provision is identical to section 5002 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 4003. Additional technicals

Section 4003 makes additional technical changes to criminal statutes, and is similar to section 5003 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 4004. Repeal of outmoded provisions

This provision is similar to section 5004 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 4005. Amendments resulting from public law 107–56

Sec. 4006. Cross reference correction

The conferees agree to add this section to make a technical correction to the International Convention for the Suppression of Terrorist Bombings.

TITLE V—PAUL COVERDELL FORENSIC SCIENCES IMPROVEMENT GRANTS

Sec. 5001. Paul Coverdell Forensic Sciences Improvement Act

Section 5001 amends the Paul Coverdell National Forensic Sciences Improvement Act of 2000 to permit local crime labs to receive grants. In addition, the section allows the Attorney General to make discretionary grants to any State or locality after considering the state crime rate and existing crime lab resources and requires each State to include in its report to the Attorney General on the comparison of pre-grant and post-grant forensic science capabilities, and an identification of the number and type of cases currently accepted by the laboratory. This provision is identical to section 7001 of the Senate bill.

Sec. 5002. Authorization of appropriations

Section 5002 authorizes to be appropriated for each of fiscal years 2002 through 2007 such sums as necessary for the Center for Domestic Preparedness of the Department of Justice in Anniston, Alabama; the Texas Engineering Extension Service of Texas A&M University; the Energetic Materials Research and Test Center of the New Mexico Institute of Mining and Technology; the Academy of Counterterrorist Education at Louisiana State University; the National Exercise, Test, and Training Center of the Department of Energy, located at the Nevada test site; the National Center for the Study of Counter-Terrorism and Cyber-Crime at Norwich University; and the Northeast Counterdrug Training Center at Fort Indiantown Gap, Pennsylvania. This provision is similar to section 7002 of the Senate bill.

DIVISION C—IMPROVEMENTS TO CRIMINAL JUSTICE, CIVIL JUSTICE, IMMIGRATION, JUVENILE JUSTICE, AND INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY AND ANTITRUST LAWS

TITLE I—CRIMINAL JUSTICE, CIVIL JUSTICE AND IMMIGRATION

Subtitle A—General Improvements

Sec. 11001. Law Enforcement Tribute Act

Section 11001 makes findings regarding the number of law enforcement and public safety officers currently serving in the United States and the number assaulted, injured or killed in the line of duty each year. Congress finds that these officers risk their safety to serve the citizens of their communities. This section makes the finding that many of the communities do not have the resources to properly honor the fallen officers that have served them.

This section authorizes the Attorney General to award matching grants up to 50 percent of the cost of the tribute directly to a State, local government or Indian Tribe in an amount not to exceed $150,000. It provides that Indian Tribes may use any funds appropriated by Congress for activities of the Bureau of Indian Affairs or Indian tribal government to meet the matching requirements.

This section also requires any application for funds under this bill to meet the criteria established by the Attorney General. It requires the Attorney General to provide an annual report to provide Congress with information regarding the number of grants awarded, the amount of funds provided for those grants, and the activities for which the funds were used.

This section includes an authorization of $3 million for each fiscal year 2002–2006, which results in a total authorization of $15 million over 5 years.

Sec. 11002. Disclosure of grand jury matters relating to money laundering offenses

In general, information relating to the investigation of a matter before a grand jury is subject to strict protection and may not be disclosed. Section 3322 of title 18, United States Code, provides limited exceptions to this rule, permitting bank regulators to obtain information in certain cases to ensure that they can continue to supervise banking organizations involved in law enforcement investigations. The statute, enacted following the savings and loan crisis and the extensive law enforcement efforts necessitated by bank and thrift failures, does not, however, cover money laundering cases. Section 11002 would amend 18 U.S.C. 3322 so that the Justice Department may obtain a court order to share grand jury information with bank supervisors if an investigation involves money laundering.

Sec. 11003. Grant program for State and local domestic preparedness support

This section makes technical corrections and adds additional uses to the Office of Domestic Preparedness grants to support state and local law enforcement agencies and other first responders prepare for and prevent terrorist attacks as authorized by section 1014 of the USA PATRIOT Act (Public Law 107–56).

The conferees strongly encourage the Department of Justice through the Office of Domestic Preparedness to support a public safety pilot project initiated by the Pennsylvania State Association of Boroughs designed to inventory the infrastructure and resources of five participating central Pennsylvania boroughs using GIS technology for the purpose of analyzing security risks and possible responses. Data collected on the five boroughs will be stored in an online searchable database or "information warehouse." Data collected will include roads, water resources, stadiums, energy plants, hazardous materials locations and other assets.

Sec. 11005. Danger pay for FBI agents

Section 11005 provides special "danger pay" allowances for FBI agents in hazardous duty locations outside the United States, as is provided for agents of the Drug Enforcement Administration. The president's budget submission for fiscal years 2002 and 2003 requested this change in law. This section is identical to section 210 of the Senate-reported bill.

Sec. 11006. Police corps

Section 11006 extends the Police Corps' authorization for an additional four years. It also deletes the provisions that now give $10,000 a year to participating police agencies, thereby reducing the per-officer cost of the program by 30% and making funds available to support more officers; and updates the maximum for scholarship payments, from $7,500 (set when the bill was introduced in 1989) to $10,000 per year.

Sec. 11007. Radiation exposure compensation technical amendments

The Radiation Exposure Compensation Act ("RECA") Amendments of 2000, P.L. 106–245, inadvertently eliminated some claimants previously eligible for compensation, and made it more difficult for other claimants to prove eligibility. The technical amendments included in section 11007 are:

Duration of Employment Standard as an Alternative to Radiation Exposure Levels—Under RECA as amended by P.L. 106–245, uranium miners are required to prove exposure to at least 40 working level months (WLMs) of radiation. Uranium millers and ore transporters are required to demonstrate employment in a mill or as an ore transporter for one full year. During the last congressional session, proposed amendments to P.L. 106–245 by Senators Hatch and Daschle sought to eliminate the WLM exposure requirement for miners and substitute a one-year duration of employment requirement—identical to the one in place for millers and ore transporters. There are many miners, however, who worked for less than one year in uranium mines but who still were exposed to significant levels of radiation exposure and could easily qualify for eligibility with a 40 WLM standard. The proposed technical amendment would allow uranium miners to qualify by meeting either the 40 WLM exposure standard or the one year duration of employment standard.

Reinsert a "Downwinder" Area Erroneously Stricken from Act by P.L. 106–245—In amending the list of "downwinder" areas, P.L. 106–245 inadvertently eliminated a portion of Mohave County, Arizona (located north of the Grand Canyon) that was previously compensable under RECA. As a consequence, claimants who reside in this portion of Mohave County are no longer eligible for compensation. The proposed technical amendment would again include this area in the definition of "downwinder" areas.

Remove Disparity for Downwinder and Onsite Participant "Lung Cancer" Claimants—P.L. 106–245 added seven new cancers to the list of compensable cancers for the "downwinder" and "onsite participant" provisions of RECA. These include: cancers of the male breast, salivary gland, urinary bladder, brain, colon, ovary and lung. With the exception of lung cancer, the Act now requires all compensable cancers to be "primary"—to originate in the specified organ or tissue. The proposed technical amendment would require that all compensable cancers be "primary" and thus eliminate the distinction inadvertently created by the amendments between lung cancer claimants and claimants with other compensable cancers.

Remove Inconsistent Treatment for Claimants with In Situ Lung Cancers—As a result of the recent amendments, RECA treats "downwinder" and "onsite participant" claimants with in situ lung cancer more stringently than uranium worker claimants. Presently, under the amended "downwinder" and "onsite participant" provisions, compensation is available for lung cancer "other than in situ lung cancer that is discovered during or after a post-mortem exam." This restricts compensation for in situ lung cancer to claimants who are living. No similar restriction exists for uranium worker claimants with in situ lung cancer. The proposed technical amendment would ensure consistent treatment of in situ lung cancer among all categories of claimants, and eliminate the distinction based on the timing of lung cancer diagnosis.

Uranium Miners, Mill Workers, and Ore Transporters with Lung Cancer Should Not be Required to Show Evidence of Non-Malignant Respiratory Disease—As amended by P.L. 106–245, RECA requires (in cases where the claimant is living) the submission of the same medical documentation for proof of a "non-malignant respiratory disease" and "lung cancer." While the documentation required is appropriate for purposes of establishing a non-malignant respiratory disease, it is not medically appropriate for establishing lung cancer. The requirement precludes most lung cancer claimants who do not also suffer from a non-malignant respiratory disease from establishing eligibility for compensation. The proposed technical amendment would eliminate the requirement that claimants with lung cancer also submit proof of a non-malignant respiratory disease.

Requiring Claimants to Prove Uranium Mines in States Not Designated as "AEC Mines" is Inappropriately Restrictive—P.L 106–245 amended the Act to allow uranium miner claimants to qualify for compensation if an additional state not designated in the Act establishes that the "Atomic Energy Commission" (AEC) operated a uranium mine in the State between January 1, 1942 and December 31, 1971. The provision states that once the State has been certified for inclusion as a uranium mining state, a claimant may demonstrate employment in that state. The AEC, however, did not exist prior to January 1, 1947. Maintaining the requirement is confusing for claimants employed in uranium mines between 1942 and 1946 in a state other than the one designated in the Act and may prevent them from qualifying for compensation. The proposed technical amendment would eliminate the requirement that a state operated an AEC uranium mine.

Section 6(i) "Issuance of Regulations" Misplaced—The new provision regarding "issuance of revised regulations" should amend "Section 6(k) Issuance of Regulations, Guidelines and Procedures." P.L. 106–245 inadvertently amends "Section 6(i) Use of Existing Resources."

Section on "Affidavits" Misplaced—P.L. 106–245 fails to enumerate a section for the newly-added provision regarding "affidavits." The provision regarding affidavits should be added as new section "Section 6(m) Affidavits."

Omission of Uranium Millers and Ore Transporters from "Full Settlement of Claims" Provision—P.L. 106–245 did not amend the Act's "full settlement of claims" provision (Sec. 6(e)) to provide that acceptance of payment under the new claimant categories—uranium millers and ore transporters—shall be in full settlement of all claims that individual may have against the United States. Presently, the provision applies only to the original RECA claimant categories. The technical amendment would correct the omission by providing that acceptance of payment shall be in full settlement of claims arising out of exposure to radiation with respect to all clamant categories. The technical amendment also takes into consideration the availability of additional compensation under the new Department of Energy compensation program (Energy Employees' Occupational illness Compensation Program Act).

"Choice of Remedies" Provision Requires Clarifying Language—P.L. 106–245 did not amend the Act's "choice of remedies" provision which prevents double recovery for individuals seeking payment under multiple sections of the Act. Presently, the Act's "choice of remedies" provision eliminates double recovery as between "Downwinders," "Onsite participants," and "Uranium Miners." With the addition of the two new claimant categories—"Millers" and "Ore Transporters"—the provision is presently unclear as to whether multiple payments are now available. The technical amendment would clarify the "choice of remedies" provision to plainly state that there is no possibility of a double recovery under the amended Act.

Section on "GAO Reports" Misplaced—P.L 106-245 fails to enumerate a section for the provision regarding "GAO Reports." The provision regarding GAO Reports should be added as new section "Sec. 14. GAO Reports."

Sec. 11008. Federal Judiciary Protection Act of 2002

Section 11008 increases the maximum prison term for forcible assaults, resistance, intimidation, or interference with a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, or U.S. official from 3 years imprisonment to 8 years and increases the maximum prison term for use of a deadly weapon or infliction of bodily injury against a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, or U.S. official from 10 years imprisonment to 20 years.

This section also increases the maximum prison term for actual or attempted influencing, impeding, or retaliating against a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, or U.S. official by threatening a family member of the employee, from 5 to 10 years, and from 3 to 6 years if the threat is to commit an assault.

In addition, Section 11008 increases the maximum prison term from 5 to 10 years for threats of injury or kidnapping of any person mailed to a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, or U.S. official, and from 3 to 6 years for extortionate threats to a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, or U.S. official.

It directs the U.S. Sentencing Commission to amend the Sentencing Guidelines to enhance penalties for assaults and threats against a Federal judge, Federal law enforcement officer, and U.S. official engaged in their official duties.

Sec. 11009. The James Guelff and Chris McCurley Body Armor Act of 2002

Section 11009 defines the terms "body armor," "law enforcement agency," and "law enforcement officer." It directs the U.S. Sentencing Commission to provide an appropriate sentencing enhancement for any crime of violence or drug trafficking crime in which the defendant used body armor. It also states that it is the Sense of the Senate that a minimum two-level enhancement is appropriate.

Section 11009 makes it unlawful for a person who has been convicted of a violent felony to purchase, own, or possess body armor. It provides an affirmative defense against prosecution if the felon wore armor after obtaining permission from employer, and possession of armor was necessary for safe performance of lawful business activity. Individuals who violate this prohibition are guilty of a felony subject a fine and a maximum sentence of three years.

This provision also empowers Federal law enforcement agencies to donate surplus body armor directly to local and state law enforcement departments. These agencies include the Administrator of the Drug Enforcement Administration, the Director of the FBI, the Commissioner of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, the Director of the U.S. Marshals Service, the Director of the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Fire Arms, the Commissioner of Customs, and the Director of the United States Secret Service. Only body armor that is not required by the Federal government is eligible for donation.

Sec. 11010. Persons authorized to serve search warrant

Section 11010 amends section 2703 of title 18 by stating that an officer's presence is not required to serve or execute a search warrant directed to a provider of electronic communication service or remote computing service for records or other information pertaining to a subscriber of that service.

Sec. 11011. Study on reentry, mental illness, and public safety

Section 11011 requires the Attorney General to conduct a study of offenders with mental illness who are released from prison or jail to determine how many such offenders qualify for Medicaid, SSI, or SSDI, how many of those who qualify are actually enrolled in those programs, and how enrollment affects whether such offenders commit further crimes, among other things.

Sec. 11012. Technical amendment to Omnibus Crime Control Act

The current version of Section 802(b) [42 U.S.C. (§3783(b)] of the Omnibus Crime Control and Safe Streets Act gives rights of notice and appeal to applicants for the Violence Against Women Act (VAWA) Grants to Encourage Arrests program (Part U) whose applications have been denied. The Grants to Encourage Arrests program is a discretionary grant program and historically, a discretionary grant applicant is not afforded a right of appeal of an application denial. This is based on the rule that formula grants create an "entitlement," which gives formula grantees certain due process rights of notice and hearing in the event a formula grant application is denied. Discretionary grants, on the other hand, do not create any entitlement, and consequently discretionary grant applicants do not have such due process rights.

A second problem with the current version of Section 802(b) is that it does not give VAWA formula grant applicants these notice and appeal rights which they should have under the entitlement concept, because it does not cite to the STOP grant program in Part T, which is the VAWA formula grant program. This is illustrated by the language of Section 802(b) by which all formula grant programs under the Omnibus statute (except VAWA's STOP program) are covered by this version of Section 802(b), and no other discretionary grant program are referenced by this provision (except the incorrect reference to VAWA's Grants to Encourage Arrest program, which would be changed by this amendment). The logical conclusion is that the reference to Part U was a misdesignation, and that Congress intended to reference Part T, the STOP formula grant program, and not Part U, the discretionary Grants to Encourage Arrest program. Accordingly, this section amends section 802(b) to give the right of appeal to VAWA STOP formula applicants and would also eliminate the right of appeal for discretionary grant applicants, as Congress clearly intended.

Sec. 11013. Debt collection improvement

Section 11013 expands the use of the Department's Three Percent Debt Collection Fund. This fund was established by Section 108 of P.L. 103-121. The language of that Act permits the Department to credit three percent of all civil debt collections resulting from Department debt collection activities to the Working Capital Fund (the Three Percent Fund) and to use those deposits to the Fund only for the costs of processing and tracking civil debt collection litigation. The proposed language would expand the uses of the Three Percent Fund and establish a two tier structure for the expanded use of those funds.

The first tier permits the Department would use deposits in the fund for processing and tracking both civil and criminal debt collection. Thereafter, if there are amounts remaining in the Fund after paying the costs of processing and tracking, the funds could be used for financial systems and for debt-collection related personnel, administrative, and litigation expenses. The second tier permits the Department to use balances remaining after the costs of tracking and processing have been paid to support its financial management systems and to pay the costs of personnel, administration and other debt-collection-related litigation expenses.

Sec. 11014. SCAAP authorization

Section 10014 reauthorizes the State Criminal Alien Assistance Program (8 U.S.C. section 1231(i)(5)) through fiscal year 2004.

Sec. 11015. Use of annuity brokers in structured settlements

Section 11015 reforms the Department of Justice's practice for using annuity brokers in structured settlements in two ways. First, it directs the Attorney General to establish a list of annuity brokers who meet minimum qualifications for providing annuity brokerage services in connection with structured settlements entered by the United States. This list shall be updated upon request by any annuity broker that meets the minimum qualifications for inclusion on the list. The Attorney General shall transmit the list, and any updates to such list, to all United States Attorneys. Second, this provision permits the United States Attorney (or his designee) involved in any settlement negotiations (except those negotiated exclusively through the Civil Division of the Department of Justice) to have the exclusive authority to select an annuity broker from the list of such brokers established by the Attorney General, provided that all documents related to any settlement comply with Department of Justice requirements.

Sec. 11016. INS processing fees

Section 11016 states that processing fees for I-94, I-94W, and I-68 forms are to be deposited in the Land Border Inspection Fee Account, as requested by the Bush Administration in its FY 2002 and 2003 budget submissions.

Sec. 11017. United States Parole Commission extension

Section 11017 extends the United States Parole Commission, scheduled to cease operations later this year, for an additional three years. There are numerous offenders who remain under the supervision of the Parole Commission, which is responsible for administering the supervised release of District of Columbia offenders. This section also allows current Commissioners to extend their service on the Commission, and asks the Attorney General to conduct a study on whether the Parole Commission is the appropriate entity to administer supervised release for D.C. offenders.

Sec. 11018. Waiver of foreign country residence requirement with respect to international medical graduates

Section 11018 extends until 2004 the program authorizing visas for foreign medical graduates wishing to serve in the United States, and raises the number of visas available per State from 20 to 30.

Sec. 11019. Pretrial disclosure of expert testimony relating to defendant's mental condition

Section 11019 restores two provisions of Rule 16 of the Federal Rules of Criminal Procedure that were inadvertently omitted when the Supreme Court transmitted a revision of the Rules to Congress on April 29, 2002. The omitted provisions impose reciprocal obligations on the government and defendant, requiring each to disclose their expert witnesses' testimony on the defendant's mental condition bearing on the issue of guilt. The version of the Rules transmitted by the Supreme Court take effect on December 1, 2002, unless Congress acts to modify them. This section simply ensures that the sections that were omitted are not thus deleted from the Rules.

Sec. 11020. Multiparty, Multiforum Trial Jurisdiction Act of 2002

Section 11020 would streamline the process by which multidistrict litigation governing disasters are adjudicated. This section would save litigants time and money, but would not interfere with jury verdicts or compensation rates for attorneys.

The genesis of §11020 of the conference report took place during oversight hearings conducted in the 95th Congress by the House Subcommittee on Courts, Civil Liberties and the Administration of Justice (now Courts, the Internet and Intellectual Property). These efforts were joined by those of the Carter Administration to improve judicial machinery by abolishing diversity of citizenship jurisdiction and to delineate the jurisdictional responsibilities of state and federal courts. Following Senate opposition to such expansive change, the Subcommittee narrowed its focus and began to concentrate on the problem of dispersed complex litigation arising out of a single accident resulting in multiple deaths or injuries.[2]

Legislation on this more specific issue was first introduced in both the 98th and 99th Congresses. The House of Representatives subsequently approved legislation highly similar to §11020 of the conference report in the 101st and 102nd Congresses; and the full House Committee on the Judiciary favorably reported this language in the 103rd Congress as well. Moreover, §11020 of the conference report is highly similar to that set forth in §10 of the Subcommittee substitute to H.R. 1252, the "Judicial Reform Act," from the 105th Congress, which the House passed in amended form with §10 fully intact. In addition, during the 106th Congress the House of Representatives passed the precursor to §11020 of the conference report, H.R. 2112, by voice vote under suspension of the rules. Section 11020 of the conference report is now largely culled from §3 of H.R. 860, which the House passed under suspension of the rules on March 14, 2001. No hearings on H.R. 860 were held in the 107th Congress given the ample legislative history that preceded it from the 95th Congress through the 106th. The Judicial Conference and the Department of Justice have also supported these previous legislative initiatives.

The need for enactment of §11020 of the conference report was articulated by an attorney who testified on behalf of a major airline manufacturer at the June 16, 1999, hearing on H.R. 2112.[3] It is common after a serious accident to have many lawsuits filed in several states, in both state and federal courts, with many different sets of plaintiffs' lawyers and several different defendants. Despite this multiplicity of suits, the principal issue that must be resolved first in each lawsuit is virtually identical: Is one or more of the defendants liable? Indeed, in lawsuits arising out of major aviation disasters, it is common for the liability questions to be bifurcated and resolved first, in advance of any trial on individual damage issues. The waste of judicial resources—and the costs to both plaintiffs and defendants—of litigating the same liability question several times over in separate lawsuits can be extreme.

Different expert consultants and witnesses may be retained by the different plaintiffs' lawyers handling each case. The court in each lawsuit can issue its own subpoenas for records and for depositions of witnesses, potentially conflicting with the discovery scheduled in other lawsuits. Critical witnesses may be deposed for one suit and then redeposed by a different set of lawyers in a separate lawsuit. Identical questions of evidence and other points of law can arise in each of the separate suits, meaning that the parties in each case may have to brief and argue—and each court may have to resolve—the same issues that are being briefed, argued, and resolved in other cases, sometimes with results that conflict.

Current efforts to consolidate all state and federal cases related to a common disaster are incomplete because current federal statutes restrict the ways in which consolidation can occur—apparently without any intention to limit consolidation. For example, plaintiffs who reside in the same state as any one of the defendants cannot file their cases in federal court because of a lack of complete diversity of citizenship, even if all parties to the lawsuit want the case consolidated. For those cases that cannot be brought into the federal system, no legal mechanism exists by which they can be consolidated, as state courts cannot transfer cases across state lines. In sum, full consolidation cannot occur in the absence of federal legislative redress.

The changes set forth in §11020 of the conference report speak directly to these problems. The revisions should reduce litigation costs as well as the likelihood of forum-shopping in airline accident cases; and an effective one-time determination of punitive damages would eliminate multiple or inconsistent awards arising from multiforum litigation.

Sec. 11020 Multiparty, Multiforum Jurisdiction of District Courts. Section 11020 of the conference report would bestow original jurisdiction on federal district courts in civil actions involving minimal diversity jurisdiction among adverse parties based on a single accident where at least 75 persons have died. The district court in which such cases are consolidated would retain those cases for determination of liability and punitive damages.

More specifically, subsection 11020 of the conference report creates a new §1369 of Title 28 of the U.S. Code which confers original jurisdiction upon the federal district courts of any civil action involving minimal diversity between adverse parties that arise from a single accident and where at least 75 people have died in the accident if (a) a defendant resides in a state and a substantial part of the accident occurred in another state or other location (regardless of whether the defendant is also a resident of the state where a substantial part of the accident occurred); any two defendants reside in different states (regardless of whether such defendants are also residents of the same state or states); or (c) substantial parts of the accident occurred in different states.

Subsection (b) of new §1369 creates an exception to the minimum diversity rule. In brief, a U.S. district court may not hear any case in which a "substantial majority" of plaintiffs and the "primary" defendants are all citizens of the same state; and in which the claims asserted are governed "primarily" by the laws of that same state. In other words, only state courts may hear such cases. (This feature was one of three changes proffered to the Senate in an effort to develop greater support for H.R. 2112 in the waning days of the 106th Congress.

(1) Minimal Diversity. Exists between adverse parties if any party is a citizen of a state and any adverse party is a citizen of another state, a citizen/subject of a foreign state, or a foreign state.

(2) Corporation. Deemed to be a citizen of any state, and a citizen or subject of any foreign state, in which it is incorporated or has its principal place of business; and is deemed to be a resident of any state in which it is incorporated or licensed to do business.

(3) Injury. Physical harm to a person, and physical damage or destruction of tangible property, but only if physical harm exists.

(4) Accident. A sudden accident, or a natural event culminating in an accident, that results in death or injury incurred at a discrete location by at least 75 natural persons.

(5) State. Includes the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

Subsection (d) of new §1369 permits any person with a claim arising from an accident as defined by the terms of the bill to intervene as a party plaintiff, even if that person could not have brought an action in district court as an original matter.

Pursuant to subsection (e) of new §1369, a federal district court in which an action is pending under the terms of the bill must promptly notify the Multidistrict Litigation Panel (MDLP)[4] of the pendency.

Section 11020(b) of the conference report amends the general federal venue statute[5] by permitting any action under the bill to be brought in any district court in which any defendant resides or in which a substantial part of the accident giving rise to the action took place.

Section 11020(c) of the conference report permits a defendant in a civil action in state court to remove to the appropriate federal district court under 28 U.S.C. §1441 if:

(A) the action could have been brought under the terms of §1369, or

(B) The defendant is a party to an action which is or could have been brought pursuant to the terms of the bill in a federal district court and arises from the same accident as the state court action.

New §1441(e)(2)-(5), as created by §11020(c) of the conference report, also sets forth the procedure for removal, along with the terms by which an action is remanded back to state court for determination of damages, including appellate procedures governing liability. Any decision under §1441(e) concerning remand for the determination of damages is not reviewable by appeal or otherwise under new paragraph (6).

Finally, §11020(d) of the conference report establishes service-of-process authority (new §1697) for actions brought under its terms.

The amendments made by §11020 of the conference report shall apply to a civil action if the accident giving rise to the cause of action occurred on or after the 90th day after the date of enactment of the Act.

Sec. 11021. Additional place of holding court in the Southern District of Ohio

Sec. 11022. Direct shipment of wine

This section states that during any period that the Federal Aviation Administration has in effect restrictions on airline passengers to ensure their safety, a person who purchases wine while visiting a winery can ship wine to another state provided that the purchaser could have carried or brought the wine into the state to which the wine is shipped. Further, the purchaser must be of legal age to purchase alcohol, the shipment must require an adult signature upon delivery and the wine must be for personal use only and not for resale. Within two years of the date of enactment, and at two-year intervals thereafter, the Attorney General, in conjunction with the FAA Administrator, must submit a report to the House and Senate Committees on the Judiciary on the implementation of this provision.

Sec. 11023. Webster Commission implementation report

This section implements a recommendation in the report of the Commission for Review of FBI Security Programs, dated March 31, 2002 ("Webster Commission"). Subsection (a) would require the FBI Director to submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a plan for implementation of the Webster Commission recommendations, including the costs of such implementation. Subsection (b) would require the FBI Director to submit to the appropriate Committee annual reports on implementation of this plan for three years thereafter. Subsection (c) defines the appropriate Committees as the Senate and House Judiciary and Appropriations Committees, the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence, and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

Sec. 11024. FBI police

This title provides statutory authorization for an already existing FBI police force that protects FBI buildings and adjacent streets. Currently, the FBI police suffers from a high rate of turnover due to lower pay and fewer benefits than the Uniformed Division of Secret Service or Capitol and Supreme Court police. This title would close this disparity.

The section defines the terms "Director," "FBI buildings and grounds," and "FBI police" as used in the title. It authorizes the FBI Director to establish the FBI police, subject to the Attorney General's supervision, to protect persons and property within FBI buildings and grounds, including adjacent streets and sidewalks within 500 feet. FBI buildings and grounds would include any building occupied by the FBI and subject to FBI supervision and control, the land on which such building is situated, and enclosed passageways connecting such buildings. FBI police would be uniformed representatives of the FBI with authority to make arrests and otherwise enforce federal and D.C. laws, carry firearms, prevent breaches of the peace, suppress unlawful affrays and unlawful assemblies, and hold the same powers as sheriffs and constables. FBI police would not have authority to serve civil process. Pay and benefits would be equivalent to pay and benefits for the Secret Service Uniformed Division. The section provides that the authority of the Washington, D.C. Metropolitan Police would not be affected by this title.

Sec. 11025. Report on FBI information management and technology

This section would require the FBI Director, with appropriate commends from other components of the Department of Justice, to submit to the Congress a report on FBI information management and technology, including whether the authority is needed to waive normal procurement regulations. The report would provide the results of pending Justice Management Council studies and Inspector General audits and submitting a 10-point plan for improving FBI information management and technology to consider (1) to what extent appropriate FBI technology management positions should be personnel with commercial sector experience, (2) how access to the most sensitive information can be audited so that suspicious activity is subject to near contemporaneous review, (3) how critical information systems can employ a public key infrastructure, (4) how security features can be tested (5) which FBI employees should receive instruction in records and information management, (6) whether a reserve should be established for research and development, (7) whether administrative requirements for less costly software purchases are necessary, (8) whether the FBI should contract with an expert technology partner, (9) whether procedures should be instituted to procure through contracts of other agencies as necessary; and (10) whether system upgrades should be tested before operational deployment.

Sec. 11026. GAO report on crime statistics reporting

This section requires the General Accounting Office to report on how crime statistics are reported and used by Federal law enforcement agencies. Specifically, the report would identify policies that allow a case to be claimed or reported by more than one law enforcement agency, the conditions that allow such reporting to occur, the number of such cases reported during a 4-year period, similar multiple claims of credit for arrests, the use of such statistics for administrative and management purposes, and relevant definitions. The report would include recommendations for how to eliminate unwarranted and duplicative reporting. Federal law enforcement agencies would be required to comply with GAO requests for information necessary to prepare the report.

Sec. 11027. Crime-free rural States grants

Section 11027 authorizes $30 million over three years for the Attorney General to make grants to State criminal justice, Byrne, or other designated agencies to develop rural States' capacity to assist local communities in the prevention and reduction of crime, violence, and substance abuse.

Sec. 11028. Motor vehicle franchise contract dispute resolution process

Section 11028 requires that whenever a motor vehicle franchise contract provides for the use of arbitration to resolve a controversy arising out of or relating to the contract, arbitration may be used to settle the controversy only if both parties consent in writing after such controversy arises. This section also requires the arbitrator to provide the parties with a written explanation of the factual and legal basis for the decision. The section provides that its provisions shall apply only to contracts entered into, modified, renewed or extended after the date of enactment.

Section 11029 states that the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Iowa may hold court in Rock Island, Illinois, from January 1, 2003 through July 1, 2005, while the Davenport, Iowa courthouse undergoes renovation.

Sec. 11030. Posthumous citizenship restoration

Section 11030 extends the deadline for allowing families of non-citizen veterans who died while serving honorably in past wars to apply for purely honorary posthumous citizenship on the part of the deceased non-citizen veteran.

Sec. 11030A. Extension of H-1B status for aliens with lengthy adjudications

Section 11030A allows for extension of H-1B status for aliens who file a labor certification more than 365 days before the end of their sixth year, and file an immigration petition before the end of their sixth year. This provision recognizes the lengthy processing times of the Department of Labor.

Sec. 11030B. Application for naturalization by alternative applicant if citizen parent has died

Section 11030B amends the Immigration and Nationality Act to authorize the submission of an application for naturalization under section 322 of such Act on behalf of a child by the child's grandparent or legal guardian, if the parent who otherwise would be authorized to submit such application is deceased.

Subtitle B—EB-5 Amendments

CHAPTER 1—IMMIGRATION BENEFITS

Sec. 11031. Removal of conditional basis of permanent resident status for certain alien entrepreneurs, spouses, and children

Section 11031(a): This subsection sets forth new procedures for certain investors to remove conditional resident status.

Section 11031(b)(1): This subsection defines the investors who qualify under this section. They must meet three conditions: (1) they filed an I-526 petition and had it approved by the INS between January 1, 1995 and August 31, 1998; (2) they obtained conditional resident status; and (3) before the date of enactment of this bill they filed an I-829 to remove their conditional resident status.

Section 11031(b)(2): This subsection allows investors whose I-829 petitions have been denied an opportunity to file a motion to reopen them, as long as they file the motion to reopen within 60 days after enactment. If the investor is outside the United States, the INS must parole the person back into the country unless they are inadmissible or deportable or they had a material misrepresentation in their petition. If an investor whose I-829 petition was denied is in removal proceedings, they too can file a motion to reopen to apply under this bill.

Section 11031(c): This subsection sets forth procedures to determine whether investors can have their conditions removed.

Section 11031(c)(1): This subsection states that the INS has 180 days after enactment to decide three things: (1) whether the I–829 petition has any material misrepresentations; (2) whether the investment created or saved 10 jobs; and (3) whether the investor has substantially complied with the investment requirement ($1 million or $500,000). The section also states that investments in regional centers or in troubled businesses count.

Section 11031(c)(1)(D): This subsection gives investors a choice of three dates by which to measure their compliance: (1) the date the I–829 petition is filed; (2) six months after the I–829 petition is filed; or (3) the date the INS makes its determination.

Section 11031(c)(1)(E): This subsection states that if the investor meets the jobs and investment requirements and has not made a material misrepresentation, the INS will remove the conditional resident status and the investor and family members become real permanent residents.

Section 11031(c)(1)(F): This subsection states that if the INS finds against the investors on any of the three grounds, the Service must notify the investor, and the investor receives a chance to rebut the adverse facts. If the investor loses on the jobs or investment requirement, the INS will continue the investor's conditional resident status for two years. During that time the investor can try to meet those requirements (see below). If the INS finds that the investor made a material misrepresentation, the INS will terminate the investor's conditional resident status. The investor can appeal to the BIA and then seek judicial review. During administrative or judicial review proceedings the investor remains in conditional resident status.

Section 11031(c)(2): This subsection provides for second determinations two years later for those investors who could not initially demonstrate the necessary number of jobs created or amount invested.

Section 11031(c)(2)(A): This subsection states that an investor can combine investments made earlier with new investments to show that altogether he or she invested the total amount required. This includes investments in limited partnerships.

Section 11031(c)(2)(C): This subsection states that the investor must file another I–829 during the 90 days preceding the two-year anniversary. Failure to file will normally terminate a conditional resident's status. There is a good cause exception.

Section 11031(c)(2)(E): This subsection states that if an investor files another I–829 petition, the INS has 90 days to decide three things: (1) whether the I–829 petition has any material misrepresentations; (2) whether the investment created or saved 10 jobs; and (3) whether the investor has substantially complied with the investment requirement ($1 million or $500,000). The investor can aggregate money invested before and jobs created or saved from the initial investment. As before, investments in regional centers or in troubled businesses count.

Section 11031(c)(2)(F): This subsection states that if the investor meets the job creation and investment requirements and has not made a material misrepresentation, the INS will remove the conditional resident status of the investor and family members, who may become real permanent residents.

Section 11031(c)(2)(G): This subsection states that if the INS finds against an investor on any of the three grounds, the Service must notify the investor, who may attempt to rebut the adverse facts. If the investor loses, the INS will terminate the investor's conditional resident status.

Section 11031(d): This subsection states that an investor whose conditional resident status is terminated can have an immigration judge review that decision.

Section 11031(e): This subsection provides that any alien who was admitted on a conditional basis by virtue of being the child of an EB–5 investor shall still be considered a child for purposes of this title.

Section 11031(f): This subsection defines "full-time" employment to mean a position that requires at least 35 hours a week.

Sec. 11032. Conditional permanent resident status for certain alien entrepreneurs, spouses, and children

Section 11032 provides similar procedures for EB–5 investors whose I–526 petitions were approved, but who never became conditional residents because the INS never acted on their adjustment of status applications or because they remained overseas. The key provisions of this section are outlined below.

Section 11032(a): This subsection states that the INS must approve applications under this section within 180 days after enactment.

Section 11032(b): This subsection defines an eligible individual as an investor who filed an I–526 petition that was approved by the INS between January 1, 1995 and August 31, 1998, and who then timely filed an adjustment of status application or applied for an immigrant visa overseas. Investors are not eligible if they are inadmissible or deportable on any ground.

Section 11032(c): This subsection states that if the INS revoked the I–526 petition on the ground that the investor failed to meet the capital investment requirement, that revocation is to be disregarded for purposes of this bill. If the adjustment of status application or immigrant visa application overseas is not pending on the date of enactment, it is to be treated as reopened if (i) it is not pending because the INS claims the investor never complied with the capital investment requirement or (ii) the investor left the United States without advance parole. If an investor applied for adjustment of status in the United States but is now overseas, the INS will establish a process to let them return to the United States if necessary to obtain adjustment.

Section 11032(e): This subsection states that like investors covered by section 11031 above, investors covered by this section must file an I–829 petition within two years of becoming a conditional resident. The determinations and process are similar for both section 11031 and section 11032 investors. For example, the Attorney General shall credit the investor with funds invested and jobs created or saved both prior to and after the date of enactment. This section gives investors a choice of two dates by which to measure their compliance: (1) the date they filed their adjustment of status application; or (2) the date the INS decides the I–829 petition.

Sec. 11033. Regulations

Section 11033 requires the INS to publish implementing regulations within 120 days of enactment. Until regulations are promulgated, the INS may not deny a pending I–829 petition or adjustment of status application relating to an alien covered under the terms of sections 11031 or 11032, or commence or continue removal proceedings against affected EB–5 investors.

Sec. 11034. Definitions

Section 11034 states that the terms used in this title shall have the meaning given such terms in section 101(b) of the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA"), unless otherwise provided.

CHAPTER 2—AMENDMENTS TO OTHER LAWS

Sec. 11035. Definition of "Full-Time Employment"

Section 11035 defines full-time employment for purposes of section 203(b)(5) of the INA as a position that requiring at least 35 hours a week.

Sec. 11036. Eliminating enterprise establishment requirement for alien entrepreneurs

Section 11036 amends section 203(b)(5) of the INA to eliminate the "establishment" requirement for EB–5 investors. Instead of showing that they have "established" a commercial enterprise, Investors need only that they have "invested" in a commercial enterprise. This section also amends section 216A of the INA to eliminate the "establishment" requirement for EB–5 investors who have filed I–829 petitions. Instead of showing that they have "established" a commercial enterprise, they need only show that they have "invested" in a commercial enterprise. They also must show that they have "sustained" their investment actions over the two-year period. This section also clarifies that a "commercial enterprise" may include a limited partnership. The changes made by this section apply to I–526 and I–829 petitions pending on or after the date of enactment.

Sec. 11037. Amendments to pilot immigration program for regional centers to promote economic growth

Section 11037 amends section 610(a) of the 1993 Commerce, State, Justice appropriations act to clarify that an EB–5 regional center can promote increased export sales, improved regional productivity, job creation, or increased domestic capital investment. This accords with a 2000 amendment that became law, amending section 610(c) of the 1993 Act in a similar way. Section 11037 also clarifies that the INS should approve applications for EB–5 regional center status as long as they are based on a general prediction concerning the kinds of commercial enterprises that will receive capital from investors, the jobs that will be created directly or indirectly as a result of the investment of capital, and the positive economic impacts that will result from the investment of capital.

Subtitle C—Judicial Improvements Act of 2002

Sec. 11041. Short title

Section 11041 states that this subtitle may be cited as the "Judicial Improvements Act of 2002."

Sec. 11042. Judicial discipline procedures

Section 11042 amends Part I of Title 28 to add a new "Chapter 16: Complaints Against Judges and Judicial Discipline," which consists of:

QUOTED SECTION 351: COMPLAINTS; JUDGE DEFINED

Allows any person who alleges that a circuit, district, bankruptcy, or magistrate judge has engaged in improper conduct, or that a judge is unable to perform his duties due to mental or physical disability, to file a written complaint with the clerk of the court of appeals for that judge's circuit. The clerk will present the complaint to the chief judge of the circuit, and to the judge who is the subject of the complaint. If the chief judge is the subject of the complaint, the second-most senior judge will receive the complaint. (The chief judge may also independently identify a complaint without receiving it in writing.)

QUOTED SECTION 352: REVIEW OF COMPLAINT BY CHIEF JUDGE

The chief judge shall expeditiously review any complaint, and can conduct a limited factual inquiry. The chief judge may request that the judge whose conduct is at issue submit a written response, which would not be shared with the complainant without that judge's consent. The chief judge or his or her designee may also communicate with the complainant, the judge, and any other person with knowledge of the matter. The chief judge shall not make findings of fact about any matter reasonably in dispute. The chief judge may issue a written order dismissing the complaint when: (a) it does not follow the rules set out in this statute, (b) when it is directly related to a judicial decision or ruling, (c) when it is frivolous or its allegations are incapable of being established through an investigation, or (d) when the judge's limited inquiry demonstrates that the allegations are false or lack factual foundation. The chief judge may also conclude the proceeding if corrective action has been taken or intervening events have mooted the complaint.

The chief judge shall distribute any written order to the complainant and the subject of the complaint.

A party aggrieved by the decision of the chief judge may petition the circuit's judicial council for review—denial of such petition is not judicially reviewable. If the judicial council accepts the petition, it can refer it for review to a panel of no fewer than five members of the council, including at least two district court judges.

QUOTED SECTION 353: SPECIAL COMMITTEES

If the chief judge does not issue an order dismissing the complaint, he or she shall promptly appoint himself and equal numbers of circuit and district judges of the circuit to a special committee to investigate the allegations, providing written notice of such action to the complainant and the subject. The committee shall conduct an investigation as extensive as it feels necessary, and expeditiously file a comprehensive written report with the judicial council of the circuit. The report shall include both the findings of the investigation and recommendations for appropriate action by the judicial council.'

QUOTED SECTION 354: ACTION BY JUDICIAL COUNCIL

Upon receipt of a report from the special committee, the judicial council may: (1) conduct any additional investigation it considers necessary, (2) dismiss the complaint, and (3) if the complaint is not dismissed, take any appropriate action to assure the effective and expeditious administration of the courts. (The council may also refer the complaint to the Judicial Conference of the United States for its recommendation.) Such action may include a temporary ban on cases being assigned to the judge who was the subject of the complaint, and a private and/or public censure or reprimand of the judge.

For Article III judges, the council may certify the judge's disability and request that the judge voluntarily retire. But the council may not order removal from office. If the council determines that an Article III judge has acted in a way that might constitute grounds of impeachment, it should promptly certify such determination to the Judicial Conference.

For magistrate judges, the council may direct the chief judge of the district of the magistrate judge to take such action as the council considers appropriate. Any removal of a magistrate or bankruptcy judge shall be in accordance with existing law.

QUOTED SECTION 355: ACTION BY JUDICIAL CONFERENCE

Upon referral from a judicial council, the Judicial Conference shall by majority vote take such action as it considers appropriate, from the sanctions available under section 354. If the Judicial Conference believes that consideration of impeachment may be warranted, it shall send that determination to the House of Representatives. Upon receipt, the Clerk of the House of Representatives shall make the Judicial Conference's determination available to the public. If a judge has been convicted of a State or Federal felony, and exhausted or waived all direct appeals, the Judicial Conference may by majority vote send a determination that consideration of impeachment may be warranted to the House of Representatives, together with appropriate court records. No referral from a judicial council is needed for the Conference to take that step.

QUOTED SECTION 356: SUBPOENA POWER

Provides subpoena powers to judicial councils, special committees, the Judicial Conference, or a standing committee appointed by the Chief Justice for purposes of an investigation under this chapter.

QUOTED SECTION 357: REVIEW OF ORDERS AND ACTIONS

A complainant or judge aggrieved by an action of a judicial council under section 354 can petition the Judicial Conference for review.

QUOTED SECTION 358: RULES

Each judicial council and the Judicial Conference may create such rules as it deems appropriate for proceedings under this chapter. Such rules must include (a) adequate prior written notice to a judge who has been the subject of a complaint; (b) the right of an accused judge to appear before the investigating panel, call witnesses, and present evidence and argument; and (c) the complainant being given the opportunity to appear for proceedings if the panel believes he or she could provide substantial information. Rules must be made public and are subject to modification by the Judicial Conference.

QUOTED SECTION 359: RESTRICTIONS

No judge whose conduct is the subject of investigation can serve upon an investigatory panel, a judicial council, or the Judicial Conference until proceedings under this chapter are terminated. No person has the right to intervene or appear as an amicus in any proceeding before a judicial council or the Judicial Conference under this chapter.

QUOTED SECTION 360: DISCLOSURE OF INFORMATION

Except for referrals to the House of Representatives, all matters related to investigations under this chapter shall be confidential and not disclosed by any person in any proceeding, with certain exceptions.

QUOTED SECTION 361: REIMBURSEMENT OF EXPENSES

When a complaint is dismissed, the judge who was its subject may be reimbursed for reasonable expenses, including attorneys' fees, incurred during the investigation.

QUOTED SECTION 362: OTHER PROVISIONS AND RULES NOT AFFECTED

Nothing in this chapter shall be construed to affect any other provision of this title, the Federal Rules of Civil or Criminal Procedure, Appellate Procedure, or Evidence.

QUOTED SECTION 363: COURT OF FEDERAL CLAIMS, COURT OF INTERNATIONAL TRADE, COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE FEDERAL CIRCUIT

Each named court shall establish rules consistent with this chapter to evaluate complaints against its judges, and shall have the powers granted by this chapter to a judicial council.

QUOTED SECTION 364: EFFECT OF FELONY CONVICTION

Any judge who has been convicted of a State or Federal felony and has exhausted all available means for direct review of that conviction shall not accrue credit toward retirement benefits or hear or decide cases unless the judicial council of the circuit determines otherwise.

The President will choose the chair of the Commission, while the Congressional leaders from the other party will choose the vice chair.

TITLE II—JUVENILE JUSTICE

Subtitle A—Juvenile Offender Accountability

Sec. 12101. Short title

This section provides that the short title of this subtitle may be cited as the "Consequences for Juvenile Offenders Act of 2002."

Sec. 12102. Juvenile offender accountability

QUOTED SECTION 1801: PROGRAM AUTHORIZED

Authorizes the Attorney General to provide grants to States, and in certain cases directly to eligible units of local government, for use by States and localities for the purpose of strengthening their juvenile justice systems. Subsection (b) provides an illustrative list of acceptable expenditures for the grant money. Generally, funded programs are aimed at ensuring that juveniles receive appropriate sanctions and face consequences for their wrongdoing.

QUOTED SECTION 1802: GRANT ELIGIBILITY

This section establishes the eligibility criteria for States and localities to receive funding under the grant program. Section 1802(a) provides that States applying for grant funds must provide the Attorney General with information about the proposed activities the State and its localities will carry out with the grant and the criteria by which the State proposes to assess the effectiveness of such activities on achieving the purposes of this part. The applicant must provide the Attorney General with assurances that the State and any localities within the State that qualify for funding have in effect, or will have in effect within one year of submitting its application, policies and programs that provide for a system of graduated sanctions as defined in Section 1802(c).

Section 1802(b) establishes the eligibility criteria for localities, both within States which qualify for funding, and within States that do not qualify or apply for funds, to receive grant funds under the section. Section 1802(b)(1)(A) requires that the localities must provide information about the activities the localities propose to carry out with the subgrant and the criteria by which the locality proposes to assess the effectiveness of such activities. Section 1802(b)(1)(B) requires that localities must provide assurances that a system of graduated sanctions is or will be in effect within one year of applying for the funds.

Section 1802(c) describes the four requirements that a system of graduated sanctions must meet for an applicant to qualify for the grant funds: (1) the sanctions must be imposed on a juvenile offender for each delinquent offense; (2) the sanctions escalate in intensity with each subsequent, more serious delinquent offense; (3) the system have sufficient flexibility to allow for individualized sanctions and services suited to the individual juvenile offender; and (4) the system should accord appropriate consideration to public safety and victims of crime.

Section 1802(d) provides that a State or locality may qualify for the grant funds even if its system of graduated sanctions is discretionary. A State or locality does not have to require all of its juvenile courts to impose graduated sanctions or to impose them in every case. In States and localities where the imposition of graduated sanctions is discretionary, the juvenile courts that do not impose graduated sanctions must report at least annually to the applicable State or locality why graduated sanctions were not imposed in all such cases.

Section 1802(e) defines the terms "discretionary" and "sanctions." The term discretionary means that each and every juvenile court in a State or locality does not have to impose a system of graduated sanctions. The term sanctions means tangible, proportional consequences that hold juvenile offenders accountable for the offense committed. A sanction may include, but is not limited to, counseling, restitution, community service, a fine, supervised probation, or confinement.

QUOTED SECTION 1803: ALLOCATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF FUNDS

Section 1803(a) provides that each State is to receive 0.50 percent of the total grant funds. The term "State" is defined in Section 1809. The remaining funds are then to be distributed among the States based on the size of each State's juvenile population.

Section 1803(b)(1) requires that a participating State must distribute to its participating localities 75 percent of the total grant funds the State receives. This "pass-through" provision is aimed at ensuring that localities receive most of the funding when they bear most of the juvenile justice expenditures.

Section 1803(b)(2) provides for a waiver of the pass-through provision when the State is responsible for more than 25 percent of the total juvenile justice expenditures in the State. The State may seek a waiver of the pass-through requirement from the Attorney General so that it may keep a share of the grant funds equal to its share of the total expenditures in that State.

Section 1803(b)(3) provides an allocation formula to distribute the grant funding among the localities within a State. The allocation formula is intended to provide maximum resources to the localities that bear the largest burden in administering the juvenile justice system in the participating State. Under the formula, each State determines the amount that each of its localities receives, based on a combination of juvenile justice expenditures and the level of violent crime in each locality.

Section 1803(b)(4) provides that a local government shall not receive a subgrant of more than 100 percent of its juvenile justice expenditures.

Section 1803(c) requires the State to investigate the methodology used by a locality to determine the accuracy of the locality's submitted data, if the State has reason to believe such information is insufficient or inaccurate.

Section 1803(d) provides that States shall expend money on services to localities whose allotments are less than $10,000.

Section 1803(e) provides that the Attorney General will reserve not more than 75 percent of the allocation that a non-qualifying State would have received under section 1803(a) if it had qualified. This reserve will be used to provide grants to localities that meet the requirements for funding under section 1802 even though they are in the non-qualifying States.

QUOTED SECTION 1804: GUIDELINES

Section 1804(a) requires the Attorney General to issue guidelines establishing procedures under which a State or locality that receives funds is required to provide notice regarding the proposed use of funds made available under this part.

Section 1804(b) requires an eligible State or locality to establish an advisory board to review the proposed uses of such funds. The members of the board must include representatives of: State and local police departments, prosecutors' offices, juvenile courts, probation offices, educational agencies, and social service agencies; the local sheriff's departments; nonprofit, nongovernmental victim advocacy organizations; and nonprofit, religious or community groups.

QUOTED SECTION 1805: PAYMENT REQUIREMENTS

This section establishes various provisions regarding payment of funds to eligible States and localities and repayment of unexpended funds to the Attorney General. Grant recipients may use no more than 5 percent of any grant funds received for administrative costs.

QUOTED SECTION 1806: UTILIZATION OF THE PRIVATE SECTOR

This section provides that States or localities may use the funds to contract with private, nonprofit entities or community-based organizations to carry out the purposes of section 1801.

QUOTED SECTION 1807: ADMINISTRATIVE PROVISIONS

This section establishes administrative provisions for recipient State or localities that receive funds directly from the Attorney General. The recipient of the funds must establish a trust fund and deposit all payments received under this grant program into that trust.

QUOTED SECTION 1808: ASSESSMENT REPORTS

This section requires that a State or locality that receives the grant or subgrant funding must provide a report to the Attorney General summarizing the activities carried out with the funds and assessing the effectiveness of those activities. This section also includes a waiver provision for activities that are not practical to assess.

QUOTED SECTION 1809: DEFINITIONS

QUOTED SECTION 1810: AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

This section authorizes $350 million a year for through fiscal year 2005 to fund the programs under this title.

TITLE III—INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY

Subtitle A—Patent and Trademark Office Authorization

Sec. 13101. Short Title

Section 13101 states that the short title of this subtitle is the "Patent and Trademark Authorization Act of 2002."

Sec. 13102. Authorization of amounts available to the Patent and Trademark Office

Section 13102 would authorize the PTO to receive appropriations for fiscal years 2003 through 2008 in amounts equal to those fees collected by the agency in each such fiscal year. The Director of the PTO must submit estimates of the fees for the next fiscal year to the Committees on Appropriations and Judiciary of the Senate and the Committees on Appropriations and Judiciary of the House of Representatives no later than February 15 each fiscal year. If enacted, however, this full-funding authorization would still be subject to appropriations.

Sec. 13103. Electronic filing and processing of patent and trademark applications

Section 13103 requires the Director to develop a user-friendly electronic system for the filing and processing patent and trademark applications. This electronic system must also allow examiners and applicants to send all communications electronically, and should allow the PTO to process, maintain, and search electronically the contents and history of each application. The system must be completed within 3 years of the date of enactment of this legislation. This section authorizes not more than $50,000,000 for each of fiscal years 2003, 2004 and 2005 to carry out this section. These amounts will remain available until expended.

Sec. 13104. Strategic Plan

Section 13104 requires the Secretary of Commerce to submit annual updates on the implementation of the "21st Century Strategic Plan", which was issued on June 3, 2002, and any amendments to that plan. These annual reports should be submitted to Committees on the Judiciary of the Senate and House of Representatives in the five calendar years following the date of enactment of this act.

Sec. 13105. Determination of substantial new question of patentability in reexamination proceedings

Section 13105 modifies the sections of Title 35 of the U.S. Code that instruct the Director to determine whether substantial new questions of patentability are raised by requests for prior art citations to the Office, ex parte reexaminations of patents, or inter partes reexaminations of patents. In each of these cases, language is added to the Title to clarify that the existence of a substantial new question of patentability is not necessarily precluded by the fact that a patent or printed publication has been previously cited by the Office or considered by the Office. This section states that these amendments to the U.S. Code will be effective for any determinations made by the Director on or after the enactment of this bill.

Sec. 13106. Appeals in inter partes reexamination proceedings

Section 13106 amends 35 U.S.C. Sec. 315 by adding the Court of Appeals for the Federal Circuit as a venue where a third party requester may appeal, or be a party to an appeal of, a final decision on patentability.

This section strikes the section in the Code that states that the third-party requester may not appeal the decision of the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. It explicitly adds third-party requesters to those who may request an appeal or participate in an appeal of a decision by the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences. It also states that all of the amendments found in this section apply to any reexamination begun on or after the date of enactment of this bill.

Subtitle—B Intellectual Property and High Technology Technical Amendments

Sec. 13201. Short title

Section 13201 may be cited as the "Intellectual Property and High Technology Technical Amendments Act of 2002."

Sec. 13202. Clarification of Reexamination Procedure Act of 1999; technical amendments

Reexamination is an administrative proceeding in which a patent may be reviewed in light of new evidence affecting its patentability ("prior art").[6] Traditionally, reexamination operated only between the patent owner and the PTO (ex parte). As part of the AIPA, a new inter partes reexamination procedure was established to allow a third party also to challenge the validity of a patent or its claims through the introduction of new evidence. While this inter partes procedure is considered beneficial because it provides cost savings over court litigation, some critics were concerned it would be abused. As a result, reexamination through the inter partes mechanism was designed with certain limitations (e.g., estoppel provisions) which do not apply in ex parte reexamination under the Patent Act.

Section 13202 of the bill merely clarifies the Patent Act's inter partes reexamination section by stipulating that it will apply to the proper parties and operate as envisioned. For example, the term "third-party requester" is inserted in lieu of "persons," since only a third party may invoke this inter partes reexamination. This is logical because a patent owner has more rights under ex parte reexamination and would not choose to use the inter partes procedures even if available.

The bill, under paragraph (c), specifies that the effective date of these reexamination procedures shall apply to any reexamination on or after the date of the act's enactment.

Sec. 13203. Patent and Trademark Efficiency Act amendments

The AIPA contained a title (the "Patent and Trademark Efficiency Act") to modernize the PTO by transforming it into a more autonomous and efficient agency. The first section of the bill clarifies the status and authority of the Deputy Director of the PTO under this reorganization. The amendments made by the succeeding two paragraphs also conform the membership of the Trademark Trial and Appeal Board and the Board of Patent Appeals and Interferences to include the Deputy Director, as under current statute.

Section 13203 amends section 5, chapter 1, of title 35. The employees of the PTO are currently prohibited from having an ownership interest in patents.[7] Members of the newly-established Public Advisory Committee are currently considered employees of the Office. Currently, those individuals who possess the most thorough understanding of the patent system (for example, independent inventors) are prohibited from participating on the Public Advisory Committee. This subsection eases this restriction on those serving on the Public Advisory Committee in light of the goals of the AIPA.

This section eliminates the need for a signature to be attested on a patent grant. This amendment removes one step of the agency's bureaucracy and allows the PTO to issue patents more expeditiously.

Sec. 13204. Domestic publication of Foreign Filed Patent Applications Act of 1999 amendments

Sec. 13205. Domestic Publication of Patent Applications Published Abroad

The AIPA established the early publication of patent applications, as described above. One consequence of early publication is its effect on the standard of novelty for a patent application. Section 13205 and the following paragraphs establish certain safeguards regarding the interplay of the early publication of patent applications and the review of novelty during the patent examination process. It is an especially important safeguard in light of the fact that the U.S. is a signatory of the Patent Cooperation Treaty, an international convention allowing for the multi-national application of patents in several languages.

Subsection 1 contains a safeguard that the PTO will only rely on information published in English in patent applications as it makes the essential determination of novelty during the examination of a patent application. This limits the evidence from foreign applications that may be considered "prior art" and could affect patentability. This is an important safeguard for independent inventors and small American businesses that do not have access to expensive translation services and the foreign patent offices.

The effective date language relating to section 102(e) generally provides that all patents, whenever granted, and all pending applications for patents, whenever filed, will be subject to prior art as defined by section 102(e) of title 35 effective as of November 29, 2000. However, patents resulting from an international application filed before November 29, 2000 and applications published under section 122(b) of title 35 or Article 21(2) of the treaty defined in section 351(a) of title 35 resulting from an international application filed before November 29, 2000 will not be effective as prior art references as of the filing date of the international application. This exception includes patents and published applications derived directly or indirectly from international applications filed before November 29, 2000, including international applications that claim benefit to an earlier application for patent in the United States. Thus, for example, if an application for patent, filed before, on, or after November 29, 2000, claims the benefit to an international application filed before November 29, 2000, and the international application, in turn, claims the benefit to earlier filed United States application for patent, neither the filing date of the international application nor the filing date of the earlier-filed application for patent in the United States will be considered in determining when the resulting published application or patent is effective as a prior art reference under section 102(e) of title 35 effective on November 29, 2000. However, under section 102(e) of title 35 as amended by the AIPA, for patents and published applications derived indirectly from an international application filed before November 29, 2000 through a bypass continuation application (an application for patent filed under section 111 of title 35 that claims the benefit of the filing date of an earlier international application that did not enter the national stage under section 371 of title 35), such patents and published applications are effective as prior art references as of the filing date of the bypass continuation application.

This section also clarifies that a patent or pending application for patent will be subject to prior art patents resulting from international applications filed before November 29, 2000 based on the provisions of section 102(e) of title 35 in effect before November 29, 2000. Thus, such patents may be prior art references as of the date of compliance with the requirements of section 371 (c) (1), (2), and (4) of title 35 and not the filing date of the international application, unless the date of compliance with the requirements of section 371(c)(1), (2), and (4) of title 35 coincides with the filing date of the international application.

Sec. 13206. Miscellaneous clerical amendments

Section 13206 contains a series of highly technical clerical amendments developed by the Office of Legislative Counsel upon its own initiative. These changes to the Patent Act are self-evident, and range from aligning paragraphs, deleting quotation marks, correcting the fonts of headings, and the like.

Sec. 13207. Technical corrections in trademark law

In Section 13207, the first paragraph clarifies the statutory text of the Trademark Act as it relates to damages. In 1999, the "Anti-Cybersquatting Consumer Protection Act"[8] established certain damages for willful violation of §43(c) of the Trademark Act.[9] The present language entitles a plaintiff to damages, but it reads awkwardly. This bill makes a technical correction to the text and thereby removes the redundant text, without altering the substance of available trademark infringement remedies.

The second paragraph provides for additional technical amendments, including four strictly clerical changes, such as the deletion of a comma and the realignment of a paragraph. The bill also makes additional changes to the Trademark Act regarding the designation of persons involved with the filing procedures for receiving notice and process correspondence relating to the trademark registration.

Sec. 13208. Patent and trademark fee clerical amendment

Section 13208 corrects a clerical error pertaining to the section of the law cited relating to the adjustment of trademark fees and the consumer price index. The change to the cited reference does not make a substantive change in trademark law.

Sec. 13209. Copyright related corrections to 1999 Omnibus Reform Act

Section 13209 makes amendments to Title I of IPCORA.

Paragraph (1)(A) amends section 1007(2) by striking "paragraph (2)" and inserting "paragraph (2)(A)".

Paragraph (1)(B) amends section 1007(3) by striking "1005(e)" and inserting "1005(d)". In section 1007(3), the amendment instructions require paragraph 12 to be added to subsection 119(a) "as amended by section 1005(e)". The reference to section 1005(e) is wrong. Section 1005(d) amended subsection 119(a), whereas section 1005(e) amended subsection 119(d). Section 1005(d) amended subsection 119(a) by adding paragraph 11. Section 1005(e) amended subsection 119(d) by rewriting its paragraph 11. This amendment corrects this.

Paragraph (2) amends section 1006(b) by striking "119(b)(1)(B)(iii)" and inserting

[9] 15 U.S.C. §1125(c)

"119(b)(1)(B)(ii)". Section 1006(b) amended section 119(b)(1)(B)(iii) by inserting "or the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed" after "network station". Section 119(b)(1)(B)(ii), not (iii), should have been amended. Section 119(b)(1)(B)(iii) contains no reference to "network station". Section 119(b)(1)(B)(ii) does contain that reference, and it is clear that section 1006(b) was intended to amend section 119(b)(1)(B)(ii).

Paragraphs (3)(A) and (3)(B) amend section 1006(a)(2) by repealing it, redesignating the paragraphs and changing the language in section 1011(b). The amendment in section 1006(b)(2) amends section 119(a)(1) by inserting new wording so that the text will read as follows, with the new wording italicized: "primary transmission made by a superstation or by the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed and embodying a performance or display of a work".

The amendment in section 1011(b)(2)(A) subsequently amends the same language but does not take the first amendment into account. It directs that section 119(a)(1) be amended to delete "primary transmission made by a superstation and embodying a performance or display of a work" (ignoring the fact that "or by the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed" has been inserted into the middle of that phrase). In lieu of that phrase, it inserts "performance or display of a work embodied in a primary transmission made by a superstation" (but without taking into account the addition of "or by the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed"). As a result, it is unclear what is to be done with the phrase "or by the Public Broadcasting Service satellite feed". Although the intent is clear, the language of sections 1006(a)(2) and 1011(b)(2)(A) does not necessarily accomplish the intended result. These paragraphs clarify the ambiguity and achieve the intended result.

Sec. 13210. Amendments to title 17, United States Code

Section 13210 makes amendments to title 17, United States Code.

Paragraph (1) amends section 119(a)(6) by striking "of performance" and inserting "of a performance". Section 1011(b)(2) of IPCORA amended section 119(a)(6) so that "performance or display of a work embodied in" is inserted after "by a satellite carrier of". The word "a" is missing between these two phrases. This section inserts it before "performance" so that the language, will read "by a satellite carrier of a performance or display of a work embodied in".

Paragraph (2)(A) amends the section heading for section 122 by striking "rights; secondary" and inserting "rights: Secondary". Section 1002(a) of IPCORA added section 122 to title 17. The title of section 122 has editorial errors. To make it consistent with the style used throughout title 17, the title is changed to substitute a colon in lieu of the semicolon and "secondary" is capitalized. Paragraph (2)(B) amends the item relating to section 122 in the table of contents for chapter 1 to make it consistent with the change made by paragraph (2)(A).

Paragraph (3)(A) amends the section heading for section 121 by striking "reproduction" and inserting "Reproduction". Paragraph 3(B) amends the item relating to section 121 in the table of contents for chapter 1 by striking "reproduction" and inserting "Reproduction". This makes the heading for section 121 and the table of contents for chapter 1 conform to the editorial style used for the rest of the headings for title 17 by capitalizing "reproduction".

Paragraphs (4)(A), (4)(B), and (4)(C) amend cross references to the limitations on exclusive rights in copyright to include section 122. Throughout title 17, such references to "121" are changed to "122". Paragraph 4(A) amends section 106 by striking "107 through 121" and inserting "107 through 122". Paragraph (4)(B) amends section 501(a) by striking "106 through 121" and inserting "106 through 122". Paragraph (4)(C) amends section 511(a) by striking "106 through 121" and inserting "106 through 122".

Paragraph (5)(A) amends section 101 by moving the definition of "computer program" so that it appears after the definition of "compilation". Paragraph (5)(B) amends section 101 by moving the definition of "registration" so that it appears after the definition of "publicly". This amendment ensures that the definitions appear in alphabetical order.

Paragraph (6) amends section 110(4)(B) in the matter preceding clause (i) by striking "conditions;" and inserting "conditions:". A colon is the proper punctuation when a phrase that introduces multiple subparts is worded to include "the following".

Paragraph (7) amends section 118(b)(1) in the second sentence by striking "to it". This section was amended by the Copyright Royalty Tribunal Reform Act of 1993 to substitute "Librarian of Congress" for references to the "Copyright Royalty Tribunal" (CRT). As originally enacted by the Copyright Act of 1976, the second sentence in subsection(b) used the pronoun "it" to refer to the CRT. As amended in 1993, the sentence now states, "The Librarian of Congress shall proceed on the basis of the proposals submitted to it. . . ." This amendment corrects that reference.

Paragraphs (8)(A) and (B) amend section 119(b)(1)(A). Paragraph (A) strikes "transmitted" and inserts "retransmitted". Paragraph (B) strikes "transmissions" and inserts "retransmissions". These paragraphs correct two drafting errors in section 119(b)(1)(A) when it was enacted by the Satellite Home Viewer Act of 1988.

Paragraphs (9)(A), (B) and (C) amend section 203(a)(2). Paragraph (9)(A)(i) amends subparagraph (A) by striking "(A) the" and inserts "(A) The". Paragraph (9)(A)(ii) amends subparagraph (A) by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting a period. Paragraph (9)(B)(i) amends subparagraph (B) by striking "(B) the" and inserting "(B) The". Paragraph (9)(B)(ii) amends subparagraph (B) by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting a period. Paragraph (9)(C) amends subparagraph (C) by striking "(C) the" and inserting "(C) The".

Paragraphs (10)(A), (B) and (C) amend section 304(c)(2). Paragraph (10)(A)(i) amends subparagraph (A) by striking "(A) the" and inserting "(A) The". Paragraph (10)(A)(ii) amends subparagraph (A) by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting a period. Paragraph (10)(B)(i) amends subparagraph (B) by striking "(B) the" and inserting "(B) The". Paragraph (10)(B)(ii) amends subparagraph (B) by striking the semicolon at the end and inserting a period. Paragraph (10)(C) amends subparagraph (C) by striking "(C) the" and inserting "(C) The". The addition of subparagraph (C) to sections 203(a)(2) and 304(c)(2) resulted in inconsistent punctuation and this amendment makes the punctuation in sections 203(a)(2) and 304(c)(2) internally consistent.

Paragraph (11) amends the item relating to section 903 in the table of contents for chapter 9 by striking "licensure" and inserting "licensing". As originally enacted in 1984, the table of contents for chapter 9 and the text each had a different heading for section 903. The heading in the text was the same as it is now, which is "Ownership, transfer, licensing, and recordation". The heading in the table of contents was, "Ownership and transfer." In 1997, a technical amendment changed the heading in the table of sections to its present form, which is, "Ownership, transfer, licensure, and recordation." The 1997 amendment did not change the heading in the text to make it the same. This amendment makes both the table of contents and the heading in the text the same.

Paragraph (12) amends section 109 by striking subsection (e). Section 803 of the Computer Software Rental Amendments Act of 1990 amended section 109 of title 17 by adding subsection (e). According to section 804(c) the amendments made by section 803 shall not apply to public performances or displays that occur on or after October 1, 1995. Therefore, section 109 is expired.

Sec. 13211. Other copyright related technical amendments.

Section 13211 makes other technical and conforming amendments. Paragraph (a) amends title 18, section 2319(e)(2) by striking "107 through 120" and inserting "107 through 122". Paragraph (b)(1) and (2) correct an incorrect reference to an uncodified title. It is incorrect to directly cite to an uncodified title.

Subtitle C—Educational Use Copyright Exemption

Sec. 13301. Educational use copyright exemption

Subsection (a) provides that this provision may be cited as the "Technology, Education and Copyright Harmonization Act of 2002."

Subsection (b): Exemption of certain performances and displays for educational uses

Section 1(b) of the TEACH Act amends section 110(2) of the Copyright Act to encompass performances and displays of copyrighted works in digital distance education under appropriate circumstances. The section expands the scope of works to which the amended section 110(2) exemption applies to include performances of reasonable and limited portions of works other than nondramatic literary and musical works (which are currently covered by the exemption), while also limiting the amount of any work that may be displayed under the exemption to what is typically displayed in the course of a live classroom session. At the same time, section 1(b) removes the concept of the physical classroom, while maintaining and clarifying the requirement of mediated instructional activity and limiting the availability of the exemption to mediated instructional activities of governmental bodies and "accredited" non-profit educational institutions. This section of the Act also limits the amended exemption to exclude performances and displays given by means of a copy or phonorecord that is not lawfully made and acquired, which the transmitting body or institution knew or had reason to believe was not lawfully made and acquired. In addition, section 1(b) requires the transmitting institution to apply certain technological protection measures to protect against retention of the work and further downstream dissemination. The section also clarifies that participants in authorized digital distance education transmissions will not be liable for any infringement by reason of transient or temporary reproductions that may occur through the automatic technical process of a digital transmission for the purpose of a performance or display permitted under the section. Obviously, with respect to such reproductions, the distribution right would not be infringed. Throughout the Act, the term "transmission" is intended to include transmissions by digital, as well as analog means.

Works subject to the exemption and applicable portions

The TEACH Act expands the scope of the section 110(2) exemption to apply to performances and displays of all categories of copyrighted works, subject to specific exclusions for works "produced or marketed primarily for performance or display as part of mediated instructional activities transmitted via digital networks" and performance or displays "given by means of a copy or phonorecord that is not lawfully made and acquired," which the transmitting body or institution "knew or had reason to believe was not lawfully made and acquired."

Unlike the current section 110(2), which applies only to public performances of non-dramatic literary or musical works, the amendment would apply to public performances of any type of work, subject to certain exclusions set forth in section 110(2), as amended. The performance of works other than non-dramatic literary or musical works is limited, however, to "reasonable and limited portions" of less than the entire work. What constitutes a "reasonable and limited" portion should take into account both the nature of the market for that type of work and the pedagogical purposes of the performance.

In addition, because "display" of certain types of works, such as literary works using an "e-book" reader, could substitute for traditional purchases of the work (e.g., a text book), the display exemption is limited to "an amount comparable to that which is typically displayed in the course of a live classroom setting." This limitation is a further implementation of the "mediated instructional activity" concept described below, and recognizes that a "display" may have a different meaning and impact in the digital environment than in the analog environment to which section 110(2) has previously applied. The "limited portion" formulation used in conjunction with the performance right exemption is not used in connection with the display right exemption, because, for certain works, display of the entire work could be appropriate and consistent with displays typically made in a live classroom setting (e.g., short poems or essays, or images of pictorial, graphic, or sculptural works, etc.).

The exclusion for works "produced or marketed primarily for performance or display as part of mediated instructional activities transmitted via digital networks" is intended to prevent the exemption from undermining the primary market for (and, therefore, impairing the incentive to create, modify or distribute) those materials whose primary market would otherwise fall within the scope of the exemption. The concept of "performance or display as part of mediated instructional activities" is discussed in greater detail below, in connection with the scope of the exemption. It is intended to have the same meaning and application here, so that works produced or marketed primarily for activities covered by the exemption would be excluded from the exemption. The exclusion is not intended to apply generally to all educational materials or to all materials having educational value. The exclusion is limited to materials whose primary market is "mediated instructional activities," i.e., materials performed or displayed as an integral part of the class experience, analogous to the type of performance or display that would take place in a live classroom setting. At the same time, the reference to "digital networks" is intended to limit the exclusion to materials whose primary market is the digital network environment, not instructional materials developed and marketed for use in the physical classroom.

The exclusion of performances or displays "given by means of a copy or phonorecord that is not lawfully made and acquired" under Title 17 is based on a similar exclusion in the current language of section 110(1) for the performance or display of an audiovisual work in the classroom. Unlike the provision in section 110(1), the exclusion here applies to the performance or display of any work. But, as in section 110(1), the exclusion applies only where the transmitting body or institution "knew or had reason to believe" that the copy or phonorecord was not lawfully made and acquired. As noted in the Register's Report, the purpose of the exclusion is to reduce the likelihood that an exemption intended to cover only the equivalent of traditional concepts of performance and display would result in the proliferation or exploitation of unauthorized copies.[10] An educator would typically purchase, license, rent, make a fair-use copy, or otherwise lawfully acquire the copy to be used, and works not yet made available in the market (whether by distribution, performance or display) would, as a practical matter, be rendered ineligible for use under the exemption.

Eligible transmitting entities

As under the current section 110(2), the exemption, as amended, is limited to government bodies and non-profit educational institutions. However, due to the fact that, as the Register's Report points out, "nonprofit educational institutions" are no longer a closed and familiar group, and the ease with which anyone can transmit educational material over the Internet, the amendment would require non-profit educational institutions to be "accredited" in order to provide further assurances that the institution is a bona fide educational institution. It is not otherwise intended to alter the eligibility criteria. Nor is it intended to limit or affect any other provision of the Copyright Act that relates to non-profit educational institutions or to imply that non-accredited educational institutions are necessarily not bona fide.

"Accreditation" is defined in section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act in terms of the qualification of the educational institution. It is not defined in terms of particular courses or programs. Thus, an accredited nonprofit educational institution qualifies for the exemption with respect to its courses whether or not the courses are part of a degree or certificate-granting program.

Qualifying performances and displays; mediated instructional activities

Subparagraph (2)(A) of the amended exemption provides that the exemption applies to a performance or display made "by, at the direction of, or under the actual supervision of an instructor as an integral part of a class session offered as a regular part of . . . systematic mediated instructional activity." The subparagraph includes several requirements, all of which are intended to make clear that the transmission must be part of mediated instructional activity. First, the performance or display must be made by, under the direction of, or under the actual supervision of an instructor. The performance or display may be initiated by the instructor. It may also be initiated by a person enrolled in the class as long as it is done either at the direction, or under the actual supervision, of the instructor. "Actual" supervision is intended to require that the instructor is, in fact, supervising the class activities, and that supervision is not in name or theory only. It is not intended to require either constant, real-time supervision by the instructor or pre-approval by the instructor for the performance or display. Asynchronous learning, at the pace of the student, is a significant and beneficial characteristic of digital distance education, and the concept of control and supervision is not intended to limit the qualification of such asynchronous activities for this exemption.

The performance or display must also be made as an "integral part" of a class session, so it must be part of a class itself, rather than ancillary to it. Further, it must fall within the concept of "mediated instructional activities" as described in section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act. This latter concept is intended to require the performance or display to be analogous to the type of performance or display that would take place in a live classroom setting. Thus, although it is possible to display an entire textbook or extensive course-pack material through an e-book reader or similar device or computer application, this type of use of such materials as supplemental reading would not be analogous to the type of display that would take place in the classroom, and therefore would not be authorized under the exemption.

The amended exemption is not intended to address other uses of copyrighted works in the course of digital distance education, including student use of supplemental or research materials in digital form, such as electronic course packs, e-reserves, and digital library resources. Such activities do not involve uses analogous to the performances and displays currently addressed in section 110(2).

The "mediated instructional activity" requirement is thus intended to prevent the exemption provided by the TEACH Act from displacing textbooks, course packs or other material in any media, copies or phonorecords of which are typically purchased or acquired by students for their independent use and retention "in most post-secondary and some elementary and secondary contexts). The Committee notes that in many secondary and elementary school contexts, such copies of such materials are not purchased or acquired directly by the students, but rather are provided for the students" independent use and possession (for the duration of the course) by the institution.

The limitation of the exemption to systematic "mediated instructional activities" in subparagraph (2)(A) of the amended exemption operates together with the exclusion in the opening clause of section 110(2) for works "produced or marketed primarily for performance or display as part of mediated instructional activities transmitted via digital networks" to place boundaries on the exemption. The former relates to the nature of the exempt activity; the latter limits the relevant materials by excluding those primarily produced or marketed for the exempt activity.

One example of the interaction of the two provisions is the application of the exemption to textbooks. Pursuant to subparagraph (2)(A), which limits the exemption to "mediated instructional activities," the display of material from a textbook that would typically be purchased by students in the local classroom environment, in lieu of purchase by the students, would not fall within the exemption. Conversely, because textbooks typically are not primarily produced or marketed for performance or display in a manner analogous to performances or display in the live classroom setting, they would not per se be excluded from the exemption under the exclusion in the opening clause. Thus, an instructor would not be precluded from using a chart or table or other short excerpt from a textbook different from the one assigned for the course, or from emphasizing such an excerpt from the assigned textbook that had been purchased by the students.

The requirement of subparagraph (2)(B), that the performance or display must be directly related and of material assistance to the teaching content of the transmission, is found in current law, and has been retained in its current form. As noted in the Register's Report[11], this test of relevance and materiality connects the copyrighted work to the curriculum, and it means that the portion performed or displayed may not be performed or displayed for the mere entertainment of the students, or as unrelated background material.

Limitations on receipt of transmissions

Unlike current section 110(2), the TEACH Act amendment removes the requirement that transmissions be received in classrooms or similar places devoted to instruction unless the recipient is an officer or employee of a governmental body or is prevented by disability or special circumstances from attending a classroom or similar place of instruction. One of the great potential benefits of digital distance education is its ability to reach beyond the physical classroom, to provide quality educational experiences to all students of all income levels, in cities and rural settings, in schools and on campuses, in the workplace, at home, and at times selected by students to meet their needs.

In its place, the Act substitutes the requirements in subparagraph (2)(C) that the transmission be made solely for and, to the extent technologically feasible, the reception be limited to students officially enrolled in the course for which the transmission is made or governmental employees as part of their official duties or employment. This requirement is not intended to impose a general requirement of network security. Rather, it is intended to require only that the students or employees authorized to be recipients of the transmission should be identified, and the transmission should be technologically limited to such identified authorized recipients through systems such as password access or other similar measures.

Additional safeguards to counteract new risks

The digital transmission of works to students poses greater risks to copyright owners than transmissions through analog broadcasts. Digital technologies make possible the creation of multiple copies, and their rapid and widespread dissemination around the world. Accordingly, the TEACH Act includes several safeguards not currently present in section 110(2).

First, a transmitting body or institution seeking to invoke the exemption is required to institute policies regarding copyright and to provide information to faculty, students, and relevant staff members that accurately describe and promote compliance with copyright law. Further, the transmitting organization must provide notice to recipients that materials used in connection with the course may be subject to copyright protection. These requirements are intended to promote an environment of compliance with the law, inform recipients of their responsibilities under copyright law, and decrease the likelihood of unintentional and uninformed acts of infringement.

Second, in the case of a digital transmission, the transmitting body or institution is required to apply technological measures to prevent (i) retention of the work in accessible form by recipients to which it sends the work for longer than the class session, and (ii) unauthorized further dissemination of the work in accessible form by such recipients. Measures intended to limit access to authorized recipients of transmissions from the transmitting body or institution are not addressed in this subparagraph (2)(D). Rather, they are the subjects of subparagraph (2)(C).

Third, in the case of a digital transmission, the transmitting body or institution must not "engage in conduct that could reasonably be expected to interfere with technological measures used by copyright owners to prevent such retention or unauthorized further dissemination." As the context makes clear, this requirement refers to conduct that is taken in connection with the particular transmissions subject to the exemption, rather than to the broader activities of the transmitting body or institution generally. Further, like the other provisions under paragraph (2)(D)(ii), the requirement has no legal effect other than as a condition of eligibility for the exemption. Thus, it is not otherwise enforceable to preclude or prohibit conduct.

The requirement that technological measures be applied to limit retention for no longer than the "class session" refers back to the requirement that the performance be made as an "integral part of a class session." The duration of a "class session" in asynchronous distance education would generally be that period during which a student is logged on to the server of the institution or governmental body making the display or performance, but is likely to vary with the needs of the student and with the design of the particular course. It does not mean the duration of a particular course (i.e., a semester or term), but rather is intended to describe the equivalent of an actual single face-to-face mediated class session (although it may be asynchronous and one student may remain online or retain access to the performance or display for longer than another student as needed to complete the class session). Although flexibility is necessary to accomplish the pedagogical goals of distance education, the Committee expects that a common sense construction will be applied so that a copy or phonorecord displayed or performed in the course of a distance education program would not remain in the possession of the recipient in a way that could substitute for acquisition or for uses other than use in the particular class session. Conversely, the technological protection measure in subparagraph (2)(D)(ii) refers only to retention of a copy or phonorecord in the computer of the recipient of a transmission. The material to be performed or displayed may, under the amendments made by the Act to section 112 and with certain limitations set forth therein, remain on the server of the institution or government body for the duration of its use in one or more courses, and may be accessed by a student each time the student logs on to participate in the particular class session of the course in which the display or performance is made. The reference to "accessible form" recognizes that certain technological protection measures that could be used to comply with subparagraph (2)(D)(ii) do not cause the destruction or prevent the making of a digital file; rather they work by encrypting the work and limiting access to the keys and the period in which such file may be accessed. On the other hand, an encrypted file would still be considered to be in "accessible form" if the body or institution provides the recipient with a key for use beyond the class session.

Paragraph (2)(D)(ii) provides, as a condition of eligibility for the exemption, that a transmitting body or institution apply technological measures that reasonably prevent both retention of the work in accessible form for longer than the class session and further dissemination of the work. This requirement does not impose a duty to guarantee that retention and further dissemination will never occur. Nor does it imply that there is an obligation to monitor recipient conduct. Moreover, the "reasonably prevent" standard should not be construed to imply perfect efficacy in stopping retention or further dissemination. The obligation to "reasonably prevent" contemplates an objectively reasonable standard regarding the ability of a technological protection measure to achieve its purpose. Examples of technological protection measures that exist today and would reasonably prevent retention and further dissemination, include measures used in connection with streaming to prevent the copying of streamed material, such as the Real Player "Secret Handshake/Copy Switch" technology discussed in Real Networks v. Streambox, 2000 WL 127311 (Jan. 18, 2000) or digital rights management systems that limit access to or use of encrypted material downloaded onto a computer. It is not the Committee's intent, by noting the existence of the foregoing, to specify the use of any particular technology to comply with subparagraph (2)(D)(ii). Other technologies will certainly evolve. Further, it is possible that, as time passes, a technological protection measure may cease to reasonably prevent retention of the work in accessible form for longer than the class session and further dissemination of the work, either due to the evolution of technology or to the widespread availability of a hack that can be readily used by the public. In those cases, a transmitting organization would be required to apply a different measure.

Nothing in section 110(2) should be construed to affect the application or interpretation of section 1201. Conversely, nothing in section 1201 should be construed to affect the application or interpretation of section 110(2).

Transient and temporary copies

Section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act implements the Register's recommendation that liability not be imposed upon those who participate in digitally transmitted performances and displays authorized under this subsection by reason of copies or phonorecords made through the automatic technical process of such transmission, or any distribution resulting therefrom. Certain modifications have been made to the Register's recommendations to accommodate instances where the recommendation was either too broad or not sufficiently broad to cover the appropriate activities.

The third paragraph added to the amended exemption under section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act recognizes that transmitting organizations should not be responsible for copies or phonorecords made by third parties, beyond the control of the transmitting organization. However, consistent with the Register's concern that the exemption should not be transformed into a mechanism for obtaining copies,[12] the paragraph also requires that such transient or temporary copies stored on the system or network controlled or operated by the transmitting body or institution shall not be maintained on such system or network "in a manner ordinarily accessible to anyone other than anticipated recipients" or "in a manner ordinarily accessible to such anticipated recipients for a longer period than is reasonably necessary to facilitate the transmissions" for which they are made.

The liability of intermediary service providers remains governed by section 512, but, subject to section 512(d) and section 512(e), section 512 will not affect the legal obligations of a transmitting body or institution when it selects material to be used in teaching a course, and determines how it will be used and to whom it will be transmitted as a provider of content.

The paragraph refers to "transient" and "temporary" copies consistent with the terminology used in section 512, including transient copies made in the transmission path by conduits and temporary copies, such as caches, made by the originating institution, by service providers or by recipients. Organizations providing digital distance education will, in many cases, provide material from source servers that create additional temporary or transient copies or phonorecords of the material in storage known as "caches" in other servers in order to facilitate the transmission. In addition, transient or temporary copies or phonorecords may occur in the transmission stream, or in the computer of the recipient of the transmission. Thus, by way of example, where content is protected by a digital rights management system, the recipient's browser may create a cache copy of an encrypted file on the recipient's hard disk, and another copy may be created in the recipient's random access memory at the time the content is perceived. The third paragraph added to the amended exemption by section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act is intended to make clear that those authorized to participate in digitally transmitted performances and displays as authorized under section 110(2) are not liable for infringement as a result of such copies created as part of the automatic technical process of the transmission if the requirements of that language are met. The paragraph is not intended to create any implication that such participants would be liable for copyright infringement in the absence of the paragraph.

Subsection (c): Ephemeral recordings

One way in which digitally transmitted distance education will expand America's educational capacity and effectiveness is through the use of asynchronous education, where students can take a class when it is convenient for them, not at a specific hour designated by the body or institution. This benefit is likely to be particularly valuable for working adults. Asynchronous education also has the benefit of proceeding at the student's own pace, and freeing the instructor from the obligation to be in the classroom or on call at all hours of the day or night.

In order for asynchronous distance education to proceed, organizations providing distance education transmissions must be able to load material that will be displayed or performed on their servers, for transmission at the request of students. The TEACH Act's amendment to section 112 makes that possible.

Under new subsection 112(f)(1), transmitting organizations authorized to transmit performances or displays under section 110(2) may load on their servers copies or phonorecords of the performance or display authorized to be transmitted under section 110(2) to be used for making such transmissions. The subsection recognizes that it often is necessary to make more than one ephemeral recording in order to efficiently carry out digital transmissions, and authorizes the making of such copies or phonorecords.

Subsection 112(f) imposes several limitations on the authorized ephemeral recordings. First, they may be retained and used solely by the government body or educational institution that made them. No further copies or phonorecords may be made from them, except for copies or phonorecords that are authorized by subsection 110(2), such as the copies that fall within the scope of the third paragraph added to the amended exemption under section 1(b)(2) of the TEACH Act. The authorized ephemeral recordings must be used solely for transmissions authorized under section 110(2).

The Register's Report notes the sensitivity of copyright owners to the digitization of works that have not been digitized by the copyright owner. As a general matter, subsection 112(f) requires the use of works that are already in digital form. However, the Committee recognizes that some works may not be available for use in distance education, either because no digital version of the work is available to the institution, or because available digital versions are subject to technological protection measures that prevent their use for the performances and displays authorized by section 110(2). In those circumstances where no digital version is available to the institution or the digital version that is available is subject to technological measures that prevent its use for distance education under the exemption, section 112(f)(2) authorizes the conversion from an analog version, but only conversion of the portion or amount of such works that are authorized to be performed or displayed under section 110(2). It should be emphasized that subsection 112(f)(2) does not provide any authorization to convert print or other analog versions of works into digital format except as permitted in section 112(f)(2).

Relationship to fair use and contractual obligations

As the Register's Report makes clear "critical to [its conclusion and recommendations] is the continued availability of the fair use doctrine."[13] Nothing in this Act is intended to limit or otherwise to alter the scope of the fair use doctrine. As the Register's Report explains:

> Fair use is a critical part of the distance education landscape. Not only instructional performances and displays, but also other educational uses of works, such as the provision of supplementary materials or student downloading of course materials, will continue to be subject to the fair use doctrine. Fair use could apply as well to instructional transmissions not covered by the changes to section 110(2) recommended above. Thus, for example, the performance of more than a limited portion of a dramatic work in a distance education program might qualify as fair use in appropriate circumstances.[14]

The Register's Report also recommends that the legislative history of legislation implementing its distance education requirements make certain points about fair use. Specifically, this legislation is enacted in recognition of the following:

a. The fair use doctrine is technologically neutral and applies to activities in the digital environment; and

b. the lack of established guidelines for any particular type of use does not mean that fair use is inapplicable.[15]

While the Register's Report also examined and discussed a variety of licensing issues with respect to educational uses not covered by exemptions or fair use, these issues were not included in the Report's legislative recommendations that formed the basis for the TEACH Act. It is the view of the committee that nothing in this Act is intended to affect in any way the relationship between express copyright exemptions and license restrictions.

Nonapplicability to secure tests

The Conference is aware and deeply concerned about the phenomenon of school officials who are entrusted with copies of secure test forms solely for use in actual test administrations and using those forms for a completely unauthorized purpose, namely helping students to study the very questions they will be asked on the real test. The Conference does not in any way intend to change current law with respect to application of the Copyright Act or to undermine or lessen in any way the protection afforded to secure tests under the Copyright Act. Specifically, this section would not authorize a secure test acquired solely for use in an actual test administration to be used for any other purpose.

Subsection (d): PTO report

The report requested in subsection (d) requests information about technological protection systems to protect digitized copyrighted works and prevent infringement. The report is intended for the information of Congress and shall not be construed to have any effect whatsoever on the meaning, applicability, or effect of any provision of the Copyright Act in general or the TEACH Act in particular.

Subtitle D—Madrid Protocol Implementation

Sec. 13401. Short title

This section provides that this subtitle may be cited as the "Madrid Protocol Implementation Act."

Sec. 13402. Provisions to implement the protocol relating to the Madrid Agreement Concerning the International Registration of Marks

This section amends the "Trademark Act of 1946" by adding a new "Title XII—The Madrid Protocol," which contains new sections 60 through 74 with the following:

(A) The owner of a registration granted by the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office (PTO) or the owner of a pending application before the PTO may file an international application for trademark protection at the PTO.

(B) After receipt of the appropriate fee and inspection of the application, the PTO Director is charged with the duty of transmitting the application to the WIPO International Bureau.

(C) The Director is also obliged to notify the International Bureau whenever the international application has been "restricted, abandoned, canceled, or has expired," within a specified time period.

[15] 15 Id.

(D) The holder of an international registration may request an extension of its registration by filing with the PTO or the International Bureau.

(E) The holder of an international registration is entitled to the benefits of extension in the United States to the extent necessary to give effect to any provision of the Protocol; however, an extension of an international registration shall not apply to the United States if the PTO is the office of origin with respect to that mark.

(F) The holder of an international registration with an extension of protection in the United States may claim a date of priority based on certain conditions.

(G) If the PTO Director believes that an applicant is entitled to an extension of protection, the mark will be published in the "Official Gazette of the Patent and Trademark Office." This serves notice to third parties who oppose the extension. Unless an opposition and/or other court proceeding conducted pursuant to existing law is successful, the request for extension may not be refused. If the request for extension of protection is denied, however, the Director notifies the International Bureau of such action and sets forth the reason(s) why. The Director must also apprise the International Bureau of other relevant information pertaining to requests for extension of protection within designated time periods.

(H) If an extension for protection is granted, the PTO issues a certificate attesting to such action, and publishes notice of the certificate in the "Official Gazette." Holders of extension certificates thereafter enjoy protection equal to that of other owners of registration listed on the Principal Register of the PTO.

(I) If the International Bureau notifies the PTO of a cancellation of some or all of the goods and services listed in the international registration, the PTO must cancel an extension of protection with respect to the same goods and services as of the date on which the international registration was canceled. Similarly, if the International Bureau does not renew an international registration, the corresponding extension of protection in the United States shall cease to be valid. Finally, the holder of an international registration canceled in whole or in part by the International Bureau may file an application for the registration of the same mark for any of the goods and services to which the cancellation applies that were covered by an extension of protection in the United States based on that international registration.

(J) The holder of an extension of protection must, within designated time periods and under certain conditions, file an affidavit setting forth the relevant goods or services on or in connection with which the mark is in use in commerce and attaching a specimen or facsimile showing the current use of the mark in commerce, or setting forth that any nonuse is due to special circumstances which excuse such nonuse and is not due to any intention to abandon the mark.

(K) The right to an extension of protection may be assigned to a third party so long as that person is a national of, or is domiciled in, or has a "bonafide" and effective industrial or commercial establishment in a country that is a member of the Protocol; or has such a business in a country that is a member of an intergovernmental organization (such as the EC) belonging to the Protocol.

(L) An extension of protection conveys the same rights as an existing registration for the same mark if the extension and existing registration are owned by the same person, and extension of protection and the existing registration cover the same goods or services, and the certificate of extension is issued after the date of the existing registration.

Sec. 13403. Effective date

This section states that the effective date of the act shall commence on the date on which the Madrid Protocol enters into force with respect to the United States or 1 year after the date of enactment of the act, whichever occurs later.

TITLE IV—ANTITRUST TECHNICAL CORRECTIONS ACT OF 2002

Sec. 14101. Short title

Section 14101 provides that this title may be cited as the "Antitrust Technical Corrections Act of 2002."

Sec. 14102. Amendments

Subsection 14102(a) repeals the paragraph in Section 11 of Panama Canal Act, prohibiting ships owned by persons who are violating the antitrust laws from passing through the Canal.

Subsection 14102(b) adds a new Section 3(b) to the Sherman Act to clarify that Section 2 of the Sherman Act applies to the District of Columbia and the territories.

Subsection 14102(c) repeals Section 77 of the Wilson Tariff Act and also eliminates several cross-references to Section 77 in five other statutes (the Clayton Act, the Federal Trade Commission Act, the Packers and Stockyards Act, the Atomic Energy Act of 1954, and the Deep Seabed Hard Mineral Resources Act). These cross-references occur in definitions of the term "antitrust laws" in the other statutes and do not change the substance of those statutes.

Subsection 14102(d) corrects an erroneous section number designation in the Curt Flood Act passed in 1998. It makes no substantive change.

Subsection 14102(e) inserts an inadvertently omitted period in the Year 2000 Information and Readiness Disclosure Act. It makes no substantive change.

Subsection 14102(f) repeals the Act of March 3, 1913, requiring that depositions in Sherman Act equity cases brought by the government be held in public.

Section 14103. Effective date; application of amendments

Subsection 14103(a) provides that the changes shall take effect on the date of enactment.

Subsection 14103(b) provides that the change made by subsection 14102(a) shall apply to cases pending on or after the date of enactment.

Subsection 14103(c) provides that the change made by subsections 14102(b), (c), and (d) shall apply only to cases commenced on or after the date of enactment.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 1646, FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 2003

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 545 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 545

Resolved, That upon adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the conference report to accompany the bill (H.R. 1646) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State for fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and for other purposes. All points of order against the conference report and against its consideration are waived. The conference report shall be considered as read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). The gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MCGOVERN) pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for the purposes of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 545 is a rule waiving all points of order against the conference report to accompany H.R. 1646, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for 2002 and 2003, and against its consideration.

The underlying legislation has taken on a new meaning, Mr. Speaker, this year. The United States is leading a worldwide war against terrorism. This is a very difficult task, which requires a careful combination of strength as well as diplomacy. The legislation that we will consider today supports the needs of President Bush and his administration to conduct the foreign relations of the United States while keeping our citizens abroad safe from harm.

It provides $13.8 billion in fiscal year 2003 to help achieve these goals, including $5.2 billion for counterterrorism assistance to our allies and $1.6 billion for security at our embassies abroad.

I am very pleased to see that this report includes increased authorization levelings for human rights monitoring as part of our effort in Congress to promote human rights around the world. This legislation also requires State Department officials to work to reform the United Nations Commission on Human Rights, whose membership includes some of the world's worst human rights violators.

The underlying legislation will also help promote our Nation's message of freedom and support for democracy by providing new authorities to our international broadcasting entities, with an emphasis on those countries whose governments obviously do not permit freedom of the press.

I am pleased to see a continued commitment to our friends in Israel. Every couhtry under international law has the right to designate its capital city. In fact, however, this has not been the case with Israel. This legislation requires compliance with existing U.S. law that recognizes Jerusalem as the capital of Israel, which has been the capital of that country since 1950.

This legislation also enacts the Middle East Peace Commitments Act of 2002, which requires the President to formally determine whether the Palestinian Authority is complying with its commitments under international agreements, including the absolute renunciation of terrorism and violence.

It is important, Mr. Speaker, we continue to support our democratic allies around the world. For example, Taiwan has demonstrated its continued commitment to a democratic path even under the constant threat just miles off its shores. The administration has shown that they have a clear understanding of Taiwan's security needs by requesting four Kidd class destroyers which this bill provides for.

Mr. Speaker, as we continue our efforts to prevent future acts of terror, it is important that we provide the administration with the necessary tools to continue to bring the world's community on board. I would like to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman, and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), the ranking member, and all the members of the Committee on International Relations for in effect making the tough decisions required to produce thoughtful legislation that meets our most important priorities in this field, the field of foreign affairs.

I urge all of my colleagues to support this straightforward rule, noncontroversial rule as well as this very important underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

□ 1445

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Florida for granting me the customary time for debate, and I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the House is able to review and act on the conference report on H.R. 1646, the fiscal year 2002 and fiscal year 2003 authorizations for the Department of State; and I commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the chairman of the Committee on International Relations, and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), his distinguished ranking member, for moving the conference process along; and I thank all the conferees for their work.

The rule providing for debate is the standard rule for a conference report. It waives all points of order against the conference report and against consideration. It provides that the conference report shall be considered as read and it allows for 1 hour of debate equally divided. As such, this rule should be supported.

This bipartisan bill has much to commend it. It authorizes $8.6 billion for the operations of the State Department and related agencies in fiscal year 2003, slightly more than the level approved in the House version of the bill. The measure's funding level includes a substantial increase for the State Department as requested by the administration.

I do want to clarify that this is not a foreign aid authorization bill which would involve the authorization of our bilateral development economic and security programs. This bill primarily authorizes funding for the State Department programs, multilateral aid administered by the State Department such as international peacekeeping funds and refugee assistance and U.S. information programs such as freedom broadcasting to the Middle East and Asia.

Most importantly, this bill authorizes $564 million for worldwide security upgrades to protect U.S. diplomatic missions and personnel abroad. It also strengthens the authority of the United States to fight terrorism as well as strengthening our commitment to Israel and peace in the Middle East, reform at the United Nations, the survival of a democratic Taiwan, the promotion of religious freedom, and protection for the victims of human trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure every Member of this body could find at least one provision in this bill that runs counter to his or her convictions about what is best for U.S. policy. For example, this bill authorizes $25.9 million for broadcasting Radio and TV Marti to Cuba. Since TV Marti reaches no one in Cuba, I find it a particulars waste of Americans' hard-earned tax dollars. There is a shocking lack of accountability in Radio Marti's professional conduct and broadcast content. Often, it broadcasts news to Cuban households many hours after such news has already been broadly reported by other sources, including sometimes even Cuban government programs such as in the case of Jimmy Carter's recent address to the Cuban people. I know that the Committee on International Relations has been looking into the lack of effectiveness of Radio and TV Marti, and I hope that this waste of U.S. taxpayer dollars will soon be remedied.

The conference report also includes a total of $5.2 billion to fund security assistance provisions, including counterterrorism and other military assistance to our allies. This section of the bill facilitates access by U.S. pilots to the Gulf Air Warfare Center in the United Arab Emirates and authorizes funding for the destruction of surplus weapon stockpiles in the former Soviet Union, Africa, and elsewhere. It also includes a new program to forgive certain Russian debts in exchange for investments in nonproliferation programs.

My colleagues will detail many of these key provisions, but I would like to take a few moments just to highlight a few. This bill serves as the vehicle for the release of funds previously appropriated for back payments of U.S. dues to the United Nations. The Omnibus Appropriations Act for fiscal year 2000 provided $926 million for U.S. back payments to the United Nations. However it conditioned the release of these funds on enactment of an authorization bill that specified U.N. agreement to certain reforms, including a decrease in the percentage of assessed U.S. contributions to the organization. These conditions were successfully negotiated by former U.S. ambassador to the United Nations Richard Holbrooke.

In May of 2001, the House passed its version of H.R. 1646 and authorized both the release of the $582 million and a third installment of $244 million. However, 2 weeks before the House considered the bill, the United States lost its seat on the U.N. Commission on Human Rights. The House responded by adopting an amendment conditioning release of the remaining installment on the return of the U.S. to the commission. Since then the United States has regained the seat. This bill, therefore, authorizes the third and final installment owed to the United Nations.

This bill also completes the process of U.N. reform under which U.S. dues to the United Nations will be reduced from 25 to 22 percent, providing American taxpayers with $2 billion in savings. In addition, this bill modestly increases the level of U.S. contributions for U.N. peacekeeping, raising it from 25 to 27 percent.

At a time when the United States is asking so much of the United Nations, it is important that we put in place the financial and legal structure that will ensure the U.S. remains a responsible and accountable leader of this singular international body.

I am also very pleased to see a number of important programs authorized in this bill. Among these is the inclusion of the Tibet Policy Act, which requires the State Department to create an office for a special coordinator for Tibetan issues. It also requires the U.S. to undertake a number of initiatives to improve the condition of human rights and religious freedom for the Tibetan people and encourage dialogue between the Chinese Government and the Dalai Lama over the future of Tibet. It also calls for the release of the 11-year-old Panchen Lam from detention by China, an act that would significantly increase confidence among the international community about China's commitment to respect the culture and religion of the Tibetan people.

The gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), my colleague and the ranking member, should be commended for his leadership on this issue along with our colleagues, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), the gentleman from Virginia (Mr. WOLF), and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK). This bill will also enact the East Timor Transition to Independence Act, which authorizes economic aid for East Timor and provides a framework for a strong bilateral relationship between the U.S. and the world's newest nation. I want to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), chairman, and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), ranking member, as well as the efforts of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH) and the gentleman from Rhode Island (Mr. KENNEDY), for their long leadership in support of freedom and human rights in East Timor.

The conference report also requires the State Department to report to Congress on the extent to which the British Government has implemented the recommendations for police reform in Northern Ireland listed in the Patten Commission's report. The establishment of a new, nonpartisan police is critical to the implementation of the Good Friday Peace Accords and bringing peace and genuine security to the people of Northern Ireland. It also emphasizes the importance of continuing the decommissioning of weapons by all Irish armed groups and the investigations of the murders of Rosemary Nelson, Patrick Finucane, and Roberts Hammill. So many of our colleagues have worked long and hard to secure a just and lasting peace in Northern Ireland, and we are all appreciative of the leadership on this provision of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PAYNE), the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. SMITH), the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL), the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), the gentleman from New York (Mr. CROWLEY), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. KING).

Finally, the conference report agreement also extends and strengthens authorizations provided for the Trafficking Victims Protection Act, it requires the State Department to maintain a special envoy for Sudanese issues; authorizes $5 million for a special court to try war criminals and human rights abusers in Sierra Leone; it requires annual country reports on the use of children as soldiers; and it requires the State Department to report to the Congress on U.S. efforts in Colombia to promote alternative development, recovery, and resettlement of internally displaced persons, judicial reform, and the peace process and human rights. It also requires reports on the activities of U.S. private contractors involved in counter-narcotics programs in Colombia, an issue brought so compellingly to the attention of the House by the gentlewoman from Illinois (Ms. SCHAKOWSKY) and the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. HOEKSTRA).

Mr. Speaker, this is an important bill that is long overdue, and I urge my colleagues to approve the rule and adopt the conference report on H.R. 1646.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. LAHOOD).

Mr. LAHOOD. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to object to some language that is in this conference report having to do with assistance to Lebanon. There was an attempt early on with an amendment to eliminate most of the money for Lebanon, and I guess wiser heads prevailed.

I want to offer my thanks to the chairman of the full Committee on International Relations for working out an arrangement that will allow for the country of Lebanon to be authorized for $35 million. The language I object to is that they have carved out $10 million that cannot be used for the country, $10 million of the $35 million, until there is a certification from the President that a certain group that is in the country is no longer a threat. I think this is a mistake to have this kind of language in there. The country of Lebanon is 3 million people. It is a peace-loving country. It is caught in the switches between other countries who are involved in disputes. To single out this country for this kind of certification I think is without merit. I wish the language were not in there.

The $35 million is walking-around change compared to the money that is authorized for a lot of other countries. Lebanon certainly does not deserve this kind of treatment from this Congress. I know there are people in the administration, particularly in the State Department, who have strong objections to the way that Lebanon is being treated. I, too, have strong objections, and I wanted to make those objections known. I intend to vote for the rule. I know that the chairman and others have worked very hard to put together a good conference report; but my objection for the country of Lebanon needs to be noted here. Again, this to me is just an opportunity to take a very unjustified criticism of a country that has tried to work with the United States, has tried to work with other countries in the region. I object to the language, and I hope at some point people will come to respect the country of Lebanon and what the leaders there are trying to do.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER).

Mrs. TAUSCHER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to state my very strong support for the conference report on the International Relations Authorization Act for fiscal year 2003. I commend the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE); the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), as well as Senator BIDEN and Senator LUGAR, for their hard work to support the State Department at a time when alliances and international partners matter most.

By paying more of our back dues to the United Nations, we are finally stepping up to the plate and being a responsible partner in this great international organization we helped create.

This bill also makes a bit of history by authorizing a new way to protect the United States from the threat of weapons of mass destruction: debt-for-security swaps.

In June, the leaders of the G–8 nations agreed to fund nonproliferation programs at $20 billion over the next 10 years and stated that debt-for-program exchanges should be used to stop the spread of nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons.

Several months ago I introduced the first bipartisan nonproliferation legislation in the 107th Congress with the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH), the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GREEN), and the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF), the Russian Federation Debt Reduction for Nonproliferation Act for 2002, that would authorize the President to forgive a portion of Russia's outstanding debt to us in exchange for Russia using that money to lock down loose nuclear weapons and material.

Our colleagues in the House and Senate went a step further, including a debt-swap provision in the State Department authorization bill. Debt-for-security swaps are an important development. They will help Russia reduce its outstanding debt, involve Russia and the rest of the G–8 countries in programs that directly improve U.S. national security, and extend burden-sharing to our allies.

Mr. Speaker, now is the time to seize this existing and unique opportunity to use a tool that would both help stabilize the Russian economy and find new sources of funding for the critical programs that keep nuclear weapons out of the hands of Saddam and al Qaeda. I encourage Members to vote for this bill.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California (Mr. DREIER).

Mr. DREIER. Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) for his very important efforts on this legislation. I also join in commending the chairman of the Committee on International Relations, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), and the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for reporting out this very important State Department authorization. This, as we know, covers a wide range of issues; and I would like to take just a moment to focus on one particular issue, and that has to do with the new degree of flexibility which is being put into place to deal with our war on drugs.

We know that President Uribe from Colombia is here in the United States. He met with President Bush today and met with a number of us yesterday. I believe that efforts are being made by leaders in Latin America to deal with the tremendous scourge of drugs that have been flowing into this country.

But we had a very antiquated structure for certification, decertification, was something that went on. In fact, it was very, very poorly crafted and I believe that it played a role in exacerbating rather than improving the situation. The language that is included in this conference report provides, as I mentioned, a degree of flexibility. So it basically uses the two words "demonstrably failed" in describing what it is that countries would have done who are dealing with this issue.

So the point is, we need to congratulate, encourage and support those nations which are helping us deal with the illegal drug problem that we have faced as a Nation. I particularly want to congratulate President Fox who has faced a great deal of challenges in his country. He has come forward and in dealing with this question, there is the horrible Tijuana-based Arellano Felix drug cartel. Under President Fox's leadership, two of the very powerful members of that cartel have been arrested. There are other ongoing efforts taking place between the United States and Mexico. I believe that the language that is now incorporated in this conference report will help us further deal with this difficult challenge.

I want to congratulate all those involved in this very important effort and to say that I strongly support the rule that is being managed by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. DIAZ-BALART) and the conference report that the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) will be managing.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. PALLONE).

Mr. PALLONE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the rule and I must say that I support most of the provisions of the conference report. I am concerned, though, and I do object to one provision with regard to India. In section 1601 of the legislation, the President is required to submit a report to Congress with regard to U.S. efforts relative to nonproliferation benchmarks. There is mention in that regard of both India and Pakistan.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that India should be mentioned and specified in this report for the following reasons: First of all, in the House version of the bill we did not include India. India was included at the behest of the Senate. And if you think about it, since 1998, when India and Pakistan both tested nuclear weapons, India has had very good relations with the United States and has had numerous discussions on the issue of benchmarks for nonproliferation. Right now basically there is no disagreement between the United States and India in that regard. India has stated very dramatically that it has put in place a moratorium on further testing of nuclear weapons. India has also been very adamant about a policy of no first use of nuclear weapons, which is certainly not the case with regard to Pakistan. For that reason, I do not think we need to include India in any further negotiations or in any report that would have to be submitted on behalf of the President.

I am not quite sure why it was the case that the conference report did not adopt the House version of the bill, which I think made a lot more sense than the Senate version, and I did want to raise an objection at this time because I think that once again our policy is somehow reflecting that if Pakistan is included then India has to be included as well. I think that does not make sense under the circumstances.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of my time.

I urge my colleagues to approve this rule and to approve the conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. DIAZ-BALART. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume. I again would like to thank Chairman HYDE and Ranking Member LANTOS for leading the Committee on International Relations to a very, not only successful but I think admirable and commendable result in this legislation. This is, as I stated before, very important legislation. By virtue of the fact that it is in effect consensus legislation in that it is supported in a bipartisan way by an overwhelming majority obviously of the committee, but also I am sure later by the House, it does not I think in any way minimize the importance and really the brilliance of the result.

This country, the Nation, the United States of America, has not only a role in leadership, a leadership role in the world but constantly has to be developing ways to implement that leadership on behalf of protection of democracies and the spreading of the values of freedom. This legislation goes a long way in once again doing that, and so it is legislation that I strongly support and urge my colleagues to as well.

I think that if there is a chairman and ranking member whom I certainly look at and admire for their clarity and their leadership and their vision, it is the chairman and the ranking member of the Committee on International Relations. I would like to reiterate not only my thanks but my admiration for both of them. This is another example of why I think we all thank them and admire them. The issue was brought out of the fact that this legislation, for example, supports broadcasting to the oppressed people of Cuba, and it does and I am very proud of that. Despite the fact of the opposition of some folks such as the gentleman who expressed opposition once again to broadcasting to the oppressed people of Cuba, the overwhelming majority on a bipartisan basis of this Congress has supported and has continued and continues to support that broadcasting and the efforts to offer news and information as well as assistance to that people only 90 miles from our shores that have been suffering for over 40 years oppression. Again, if there is a leadership of a committee that I think demonstrates on a bipartisan basis in terms of the chairman and the ranking member clarity and lack of confusion with regard to dictators and tyranny and oppression, it is the leadership again of Chairman HYDE and Ranking Member LANTOS.

I think this is legislation that we can all be proud of, Mr. Speaker. Again, I strongly support it and the rule, which is eminently fair and permits obviously all Members to express any points of view that they may have on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge support for the rule and the underlying legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the rule, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 1646) to authorize appropriations for the Department of State for fiscal years 2002 and 2003, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). Pursuant to House Resolution 545, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of September 23, 2002 at page H 6422.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) and the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS) each will control 30 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the legislation under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 1646, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 2003. This comprehensive foreign policy legislation will give the President and the Secretary of State the tools they need to conduct a foreign policy that strengthens the security of the United States, protects American interests and promotes American values.

Mr. Speaker, it is traditional that in matters of foreign policy the Congress leaves the President and the Secretary of State some flexibility. This legislation respects that tradition, but it also sets limits, both on the amounts that may be spent and on the purposes for which they may be used. It identifies foreign policy priorities and it requires that Congress be kept informed.

Mr. Speaker, this conference report reaffirms and strengthens the authority of the U.S. officials to combat terrorism and to protect our embassies and the people who work in them. It also reaffirms and strengthens the United States' commitment to the survival of Israel and to a just peace in the Middle East, to United Nations reform, to the continued existence of a democratic Taiwan, and to religious freedom and other fundamental human rights.

To be specific, Mr. Speaker, this legislation will enhance our national security by authorizing $1.6 billion for security at our embassies and other United States missions abroad and by providing new law enforcement authorities for the diplomatic security agents who are charged with the protection of these missions. It will also authorize new counterterrorism assistance to countries that are helping us in this global struggle, and provide new authorities for the State Department's Bureau of Verification and Compliance, which monitors compliance by foreign governments with arms control agreements in order to stop the flow of weapons of mass destruction to terrorists and to rogue regimes.

The conference report also reaffirms and strengthens our commitment to freedom and democracy by setting aside funds for enhanced human rights monitoring, extending the life of the U.S. Commission on International Religious Freedom, providing for enhanced U.S. diplomatic efforts to promote human rights in Tibet and Vietnam, and requiring State Department officials to work for reform of the United Nations Commission on Human Rights whose membership now includes some of the world's worst human rights violators.

This legislation would also complete the process of United Nations budget reform which we began several years ago under which the U.S. dues to the U.N. will be lowered from 25 percent to 22 percent of the total. Our contributions to U.N. peacekeeping operations will also be reduced through the end of fiscal year 2004 and thereafter will be capped at 25 percent. In addition, 15 provisions promote sound financial and management practices at the U.N. and its affiliated agencies.

The conference report will strengthen our bilateral relationship with important allies, such as Israel and Taiwan. It not only provides enhanced antiterrorism assistance for Israel but also contains provisions to spur compliance with existing U.S. law recognizing Jerusalem as the capital of Israel. The conference report also includes the Middle East Peace Commitments Act of 2002, which requires the President to determine whether the Palestinian Authority is complying with its commitments under international agreements, including the renunciation of terrorism and violence, and to report to Congress on what actions will be taken in the event of noncompliance. The legislation also authorizes the transfer to Taiwan of four Kidd class destroyers, as requested by the Bush administration, and requires that Taiwan be treated for purposes of military assistance as though it had been designated as a major non-NATO ally.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the bill contains important provisions to protect a variety of other vital American interests. For instance, it requires a plan from the State Department for improving the recruitment of veterans into the Foreign Service, as well as a report on steps taken by the U.S. Agency for International Development to ensure that the bidding procession is fair to small businesses in the United States. The legislation will require senior State Department officials in the law enforcement bureau to have some experience with law enforcement and/or international counternarcotics efforts, and it will require the State Department to report to Congress on foreign governments that refuse to extradite criminals for prosecution in the United States or to comply with the Hague Convention on International Child Abduction, as well as on joint cooperative efforts to eradicate opium in Colombia.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to vote "yes" on this important legislation.

I would like the record to show what a pleasure it was to work with the ranking Democrat, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), whose cooperation and vision has added greatly to the end product.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and I rise in strong support of this conference report.

Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois, for his most gracious words.

Mr. Speaker, let me at the outset congratulate the distinguished chairman of the Committee on International Relations on bringing this conference report to the floor. Since this matter last came before the House, a myriad of procedural and substantive issues blocked the path of this bill. At every turn, the outstanding leadership of the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) brought us closer to our shared goal, and today an important and very substantive bill is before us.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this bill blends the very best features of the original House-passed measure and the Senate amendments. The conference report authorizes funds for the conduct of the foreign relations of the United States of America and funds urgent U.S. priorities, such as the security of our embassies abroad, broadcasting to the Middle East and Asia to communicate our values and points of view to foreign audiences, protection of refugees, and scores of other issues.

Perhaps most significantly, Mr. Speaker, our bill takes a huge step towards normalizing our relations with the United Nations. It allows payment of our remaining arrears payments to the U.N. and clears our debts with a host of other smaller, but important, international organizations.

In addition, our bill includes a new authorization that clears the way for the United States to begin paying our bills on time instead of a year late. Because of late payments, the U.N. has been forced to adopt unsound budgetary practices. Our legislation will help put the United Nations and other international organizations on a proper and businesslike financial footing.

Mr. Speaker, I am particularly delighted that the conference report includes language on the reentry of the United States into UNESCO, the United Nations Economic, Social and Cultural Organization. Several of us have been working for years to bring about this result, and I am truly pleased that in his speech before the United Nations on September 12, President Bush added his support for this critical initiative. The conference report now reflects this new consensus, which is truly bipartisan, to rejoin this important organization, so that the voice of the United States will be loud and clear in UNESCO.

Our actions are particularly timely, as we are in the midst of working with the United Nations to enforce U.N. Security Council resolutions aimed at Iraq. Our bill clearly demonstrates Congress' commitment to multilateralism, and it offers a vote of confidence in the United Nations. It is now time for the United Nations to prove itself worthy of such confidence by defending its principles and enforcing its resolutions. With the passage of this bill, the United States will have done its part. Now the Members of the United Nations Security Council must do theirs.

Mr. Speaker, there are a number of other important features in this bill, and I would like to highlight some of them.

Our bill authorizes U.S. counterterrorism and nonproliferation assistance as well as military assistance to recent and future NATO entrants and some of our key allies in the war against terrorism.

The bill also includes a trailblazing initiative to strengthen nonproliferation programs in Russia while retiring that nation's huge Soviet-era debt. Under our initiative, the United States will forgive that debt, and Russia will use the savings to pursue programs, such as securing its stocks of weapons-grade uranium and plutonium from terrorists and state sponsors of terrorism.

The bill has numerous important provisions on the Middle East, including the stopping of illegal weapons transfers to the Palestinians and ensuring that the PLO is abiding by the commitments it made almost a decade ago in 1993 to stop the use of violence and to negotiate peacefully. Our bill reaffirms United States policy that Jerusalem is the undivided and eternal capital of the State of Israel.

I also note that a compromise provision on Lebanon included in the conference report will create a real incentive for that government to deploy its forces along its own national frontier in areas currently controlled by Hezbollah, a terrorist organization. Our bill provides for new exchange programs for Sudanese oppressed by war and for scientists who conduct research on HIV–AIDS.

Our legislation, Mr. Speaker, provides that the Secretary of State should establish programs to train scientists and public policy experts on ethical issues relating to drug trials, allowing governments in developing countries to evaluate any trials by foreign pharmaceutical companies on their citizens.

I am particularly pleased, Mr. Speaker, that the conference report contains the Tibetan Policy Act of 2002, legislation I introduced along with my good friends and colleagues, Senator FEINSTEIN, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN), and the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. KIRK). This legislation is the first piece of comprehensive Tibet legislation ever enacted in the Congress of the United States, and it will send a strong signal to the Chinese Government that the United States has not forgotten the plight of Tibet and its people. Our legislation will promote human rights and religious freedom in Tibet, and it will ensure the development sponsored by international institutions benefits the people of Tibet.

The conference report also contains measures I introduced, along with the gentleman from New Hampshire (Mr. KENNEDY) and many others, to help the people of East Timor. After more than 2 decades of brutal Indonesian rule in East Timor and the enormous devastation subsequent to East Timor's vote for independence, our legislation will ensure that East Timor's people get the assistance they need to get back on their feet.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, our act provides for ensuring that those who commit crimes against humanity are not treated with impunity. In particular, we provide U.S. funding for the Special Court in Sierra Leone, which will deal with the human rights atrocities from that country's deadly civil war and authorizes a new U.S. rewards program to help apprehend those that the Special Court indicts.

Our legislation reauthorizes funding for victims of human trafficking, extends the life of the Commission on International Religious Freedom, and ensures that human rights are more fully integrated into the State Department's policy considerations.

Mr. Speaker, this is a major piece of legislation, crafted in a truly bipartisan manner with a great deal of statesmanship on the part of many Members. But I particularly want to pay special tribute to my good friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE), the distinguished chairman of the Committee on International Relations, for his leadership on this most important legislation. I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana (Mr. SOUDER).

Mr. SOUDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this legislation, but I have a serious reservation that I would like to discuss. I speak as chairman of the Subcommittee on Drug Policy and co-chair of the Speaker's Drug Task Force to express my concern with the permanent modification to the annual drug certification process contained in this bill.

The annual certification process is one of the strongest tools that we have as a Nation to ensure full cooperation from other nations with our efforts to control international narcotics traffic by conditioning U.S. foreign aid on such full cooperation. I believe that this is a reasonable and basic condition on the use of taxpayer dollars. Clearly, American workers should not be asked to subsidize the programs of foreign governments that will not help us stop drug traffic.

As a practical matter, we have also heard scores of anecdotal reports that the threat of decertification often has been the only real means for American officials serving abroad to get meaningful cooperation on matters such as extradition, law enforcement, and many other means of controlling the drug trade.

In fact, I was part of the Presidential delegation down to the swearing in of the new President of Bolivia; and outgoing President Cariaga made a special pitch to me and the other members of the delegation, Do not compromise this regulation. He said it was the only tool that they really had in Bolivia to take them down from supplying one-third of our cocaine down to about 2 percent, and he said that this was the most effective tool.

I appreciate very much the work that the gentleman from Illinois (Chairman HYDE) and his staff did to minimize what I believe will be a permanent weakening of the certification process in this legislation. I was disappointed that the administration supported weakening the certification standard from fully cooperating, which has been proven to work successfully over several years, to leaning toward a new standard that would only decertify those countries that have failed demonstrably to make substantial efforts to cooperate.

Instead of the burden falling on countries who want American aid to cooperate completely with our efforts, we will now presume in many cases that the foreign nations are cooperating, and the State Department will have to prove that they are not doing so. No major drug source or transit country should ever presume that it is entitled to American money, and this body certainly should not enshrine such a presumption into law.

I am particularly concerned that it appears that the administration and the other body were determined to weaken the standard to satisfy a single foreign country. I worked with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. MICA), who has long been involved with this statute, to propose an alternative. The alternative would have kept the current standard for decertification, but only would have publicly named those countries who are not fully cooperating, instead of the entire majors list, which will still be made public under the modified law.

We believe that this would have addressed the concerns of the nations. They have talked to me on every visit down to Central and South America, and they are concerned about this listing and seeming to have to go through a proving process, but it would only have listed those who are not fully cooperating, and would have still maintained our option to enforce tough sanctions.

I am still baffled that the administration would not work with us on this compromise which I believe is far superior to the provision in the bill today.

I am pleased, however, that the conferees agreed to change the certification reporting date back to September 15 from early November, which had been proposed in the original version of the bill. An early November report would have essentially removed any congressional role from the process.

I also strongly support the bill's provision allowing the President to use the old "fully cooperating" standard in making certification determination as he sees fit. I fully encourage the administration to use this standard as the basis for its determinations in the coming year, rather than the weaker "demonstrably failed" standard included in this bill. The traditional standard has been successful for many years as a tool for our foreign policy and has reflected congressional intent for many years on the proper standard to be applied in allocating taxpayer dollars. Unfortunately, the new standard seems only to reflect an agreement between the administration and a few select Members of Congress.

Let me give one specific example. If a Nation does not cooperate with us on extradition, one of the toughest and most important things, does that mean that they have demonstrably failed, or does it mean they are not fully cooperating? Clearly, they would not be fully cooperating, but it is not clear that they would have demonstrably failed. So at the margins of the real world, unless the administration takes the fully cooperating standard, we are in a real box here.

My question would be, is this going to be our new standard on terrorism? Is this going to be our new standard on human rights? If not, why is it different on drugs than it is on human rights and terrorism? I know that it has been offensive for us to list all of these different countries and try to make them prove the case, but we need something more than "demonstrably failed" and we need something that enables and gives the administration the flexibility. I hope they will exercise what they have been given in this bill, because there is nothing more tragic right now going on in America, thousands of people dying on our streets because of drug abuse and the cocaine and heroin and methamphetamines and BC Bud pouring into this country, and I hope that we do not back up on this administration on drug policy.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Vermont (Mr. SANDERS), my good friend and our distinguished colleague.

Mr. SANDERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of the Israel-Arab Peace Partners Program, which is reauthorized in H.R. 1646. The Israel-Arab Peace Partners Program is a program that I helped to create in 1999 with my good friend, the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN). I would like to thank the gentleman from New York (Mr. GILMAN) for his leadership on this program and for his help to ensure that it was reauthorized in this bill and that it receives proper funding in the appropriations process. I would also like to thank the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. HYDE) very much for his support and for his effort, as well as the ranking member, the gentleman from California (Mr. LANTOS), who has been very supportive of the effort as well.

The Israel-Arab Peace Partners Program authorizes a $750,000 pool of grant money within the State Department's Bureau of Educational and Cultural Affairs to fund public and private nonprofit organizations for people-to-people activities with participants from Israel, the West Bank, Arab countries, and the United States. Through this program, American organizations link up with Israeli, Arab, and American partners to exchange skills and ideas on issues such as health care, the peace process, the environment, and education. By working on issues of common interest to all, people of the region are able to form bonds that cross borders and build trust and skills that not only helps each of their individual communities, but also helps bring them closer to peace. In addition, it brings American citizens and organizations in contact with people from a region where the United States plays such a crucial role.

I think it is important to note the wide range of well-respected groups that have participated in the program over the last few years. Brandeis University, Catholic Relief Services, Fairfax County Public Schools, St. Michael's College, Arava Institute for Environmental Studies, Seeds of Peace, American-Jewish Joint Distribution Committee, Conflict Management Group, and American University. Some of these groups already have well-established programs in the Middle East; for others the Israel-Arab Peace Partners Program provides an opportunity to begin programs that will grow in the years to come. The more groups we can aid in establishing ties in the region, the better chance we have to build a long lasting network of organizations which are working toward professional development, community exchanges, and peace.

This summer I was able to meet with a group of 20 Israeli, Palestinian, Jordanian, and American students who were here in Washington to participate in a program funded through the Israel-Arab Peace Partners Program. Amid all the senseless killing and suffering going on in the Middle East, I was amazed to see this group of students come together to study the environment. For many of the Israeli students, it was their first time meeting an Arab person their age and vice versa. After working together on month-long, environmentally-focused internships all across this country, these students began to see each other not just as Arabs or Israelis or Americans, but as colleagues and friends. They were able to understand a little bit better what it was like to live as an Israeli or an Arab in the Middle East.

This understanding and the real life professional skills that they learned from each other and through their internships was, to me, a ray of hope amid all the devastation in the Middle East, and it really was an honor to see people from the Middle East, from Israel, from the Palestinian Authority, from Arab countries coming together in the midst of all of the horror that is existing there, talking about the environment, talking about how people can work together to make the entire region a better place in which to live.

So, Mr. Speaker, I am very strongly supportive of this effort. I think the relatively small amounts of money that we are spending here to bring people together who are living amidst all of the horror that is going on in the Middle East, to have Arabs talking to Jews talking to Christians, is exactly what we should be doing. I would hope that this becomes a step forward in continuing to have the United States fund programs like this.

Again, I want to thank the chairman and ranking member for their strong support.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to yield 3 minutes to the learned gentleman from New York (Mr. FOSSELLA).

Mr. FOSSELLA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Illinois for yielding me this time.

I would like to highlight one provision in this conference report that I think is critical and underscores why there needs to be a consistent, government-wide policy when it comes to dealing with victims of terrorism.

In the first half of 2002, Congress introduced several legislative initiatives to allow all victims of terrorism equal opportunity to recover damages from the assets of terrorists and State sponsors of terrorism. The purpose of the bill is to allow victims of terrorism to obtain justice and, simultaneously, to hold accountable those who commit and support terror. Provisions have passed both the House and the other body by a recorded vote of 81 to 3.

The proposed language included in the State authorization conference report will allow only two victims to receive compensatory damages for acts of international terrorism from the frozen assets of designated State sponsors of terrorism and completely ignores what Congress has attempted to achieve this year on behalf of all of the victims. Now, this is not to take away from the victims of terrorism. It is important. They suffered, they suffered greatly, and they are entitled to compensation. But what this underscores and highlights really is important, because all of those folks who may have suffered the same set of circumstances, even worse in some cases, from the same groups of terrorists or those who sponsor terrorism, have been shut out and denied the same level of justice that others on a piecemeal approach have obtained.

In light of what has happened in the last year, where potentially we are looking at thousands of victims of terrorism, is it not about time that an American citizen who suffers from the hands, the violent hands of a terrorist or those who sponsor terrorism and is able to obtain a judgment where the assets are frozen should be entitled to the same set of rights? Instead, what we have, and I hope it does not continue, but unless we pass it in the two competing bills in the House and the Senate, it will; unless we do something about it, each year there will be victims, and whoever can hire the best attorney or the best lobbyist will find its way into one of these conference reports. As long as that continues, there will be families and victims of terrorism who will be denied the same set of compensatory damages. I do not think it is right, I do not think it is just. I just want to bring that out to underscore why we need to pass it for all Americans who are entitled to the same set of rights and opportunities when it comes to justice.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. SCHIFF), my good friend and distinguished colleague.

Mr. SCHIFF. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1646, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act and, in particular, language in the bill on Russian Federation Debt for Nonproliferation. I want to applaud the conferees for including this very important language on ways to reduce the threat of weapons of mass destruction in the final conference report.

The demise of the Soviet empire ushered in a new post-Cold War period and a very real sense of urgency with regard to the former Soviet Union's weapons stockpile. It has become tragically clear that new threats have emerged and terrorists and the States that sponsor them are actively in search of nuclear, biological, and chemical weapons technology and materials.

During the last 11 years, the Nunn-Lugar program, which was launched to reduce threats from the former Soviet Union, has done much to dismantle these stockpiles. However, continuing economic and social weaknesses in Russia, coupled with an eroding early warning system, poorly secured Russian weapons materials, and poorly paid Russian weapons scientists and security personnel increase the threat of mass destruction on an unprecedented scale if such materials fall into the hands of terrorists or rogue nations.

Now, more than ever, we must make a fundamental shift in the way we think about the spread of weapons of mass destruction and our own national security. Using Russia's debt to the United States as a funding mechanism for programs addressing the inadequate security of the Russian weapons stockpile is an innovative approach we must explore.

The Russian Federation Debt Reduction for Nonproliferation Act, which I coauthored with the gentlewoman from California (Mrs. TAUSCHER), the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. GREEN), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. MCHUGH), will provide a means to forgive the loans and credits owed to the United States by Russia in exchange for cooperation with U.S. efforts to monitor and reduce weapons-usable nuclear material, nuclear and other weapons of mass destruction, and the facilities where they may be built.

Securing Russia's arsenal is a massive challenge, but not an impossible one. While the cost of a terrorist attack on the United States involving Russian expertise or smuggled Russian nuclear chemical or biological materials is staggering, funding for these simple measures that can prevent these attacks is sensible and urgent, and I urge Members' support.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, before I yield back the balance of my time, I would just like to express my appreciation to Committee staff for the exceptionally effective work that they have put into this legislation. Legislation of this scope and magnitude could never be completed without the dedicated effort of our staff.

The Republican staff of the Committee on International Relations worked with us in a bipartisan way. I want to express my particular gratitude to Kristen Gilley, Walker Roberts and Joseph Rees of the majority staff.

I want to acknowledge the efforts of all of the members of the Democratic staff, since in a bill of this scope, everyone had a hand in the final product. Four people deserve particular recognition.

David Abramowitz, our Democratic Chief Counsel has devoted enormous effort to the successful completion of this bill. We have greatly benefited from his solid legal and political judgement.

David Fite, played a critical role in the security provisions of this bill, and I want to thank him for his outstanding contributions.

Nisha Desai was heavily involved in the initial drafting and adoption of this bill. She has since left our staff, but her contribution was significant.

Peter Yeo, Deputy Democratic Staff Director, as always played an extremely helpful role in bringing this legislation to completion.

In addition, I want to express thanks to Art Rynearson of the Office of Senate Legislative Council, who helped assure that the substances of the legislation was accurate and accomplished what we intended. He is one of thee many unsung heroes who makes this institution function, as we owe him our thanks.

Mr. Speaker, I again congratulate the Chairman of the Committee, and yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KNOLLENBERG. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to signal my intent to support H.R. 1646, the State Department Authorization Act. It is a good bill with many provisions that will aid the State Department in its mission around the world.

However, I also must express my deep disappointment at the inclusion of Section 1224 regarding assistance to Lebanon. Section 1224 withholds $10 million of the Economic Support Fund allocated to Lebanon for the Fiscal Year 2003 and for all subsequent years unless and until the President certifies that the armed forces of Lebanon have been deployed to the internationally recognized border between Lebanon and Israel and that the government of Lebanon is effectively asserting its authority in the area in which such armed forces have been deployed.

I do not oppose the goal of extending Lebanese control to southern Lebanon. Unfortunately, this provision does absolutely nothing to further that goal and will in fact hinder any progress. The U.S. should continue to press the Lebanese and Syrian governments on this point. The people of Lebanon will only know long-term peace and stability when Lebanon is willing and able to assert its independence. The U.S. must continue to press for full compliance with UN Security Council Resolution 425. However, this provision will not lead us toward this goal.

I have supported efforts to expand U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) activities in southern Lebanon following the withdrawal of Israeli armed forces. However, far from supporting Hezbollah, this assistance undermines that terrorist organization by eliminating the desperate conditions that so many cite as a reason that region is a terrorist haven.

I have received repeated assurances that U.S. money only goes through American non-governmental organizations to support projects that provide clean water, medicine, agricultural assistance and other basic humanitarian needs. None of this money goes to the Lebanese government or to any terrorist organization.

With these facts in mind, it makes no sense to me to withhold funding that undermines terrorist control of southern Lebanon. Until the grip that Hezbollah has on that region is weakened, the government of Lebanon will not be able to deploy armed forces to the border.

Unfortunately, Section 1224 only punishes the people of Southern Lebanon rather than offer a solution to the security needs of Israel.

I will vote for the bill, but it is my hope Congress will revisit this issue in future legislation.

Mr. SHAYS. Mr. Speaker, I support the inclusion of Section 213 in H.R. 1646, the Department of State Authorization Act Conference Report. This section of the conference report repeals Section 738 of the 2001 Agriculture Appropriations Act, which gave unwarranted special treatment to foreign agriculture attachés. Both the State Department and the Office of Management and Budget support repealing Section 738, and H.R. 1646 does just that.

In 1978, Congress, with the support of the Office of Management and Budget, endorsed the State Department as the sole manager for overseas property. In 1990, Congress directed State to implement a uniform housing policy for and with the input of all agencies overseas.

That system worked. It has the support of OMB, the General Accounting Office, and apparently had the support of Congress. But last year, a little-noticed section of the Agriculture Appropriations Act changed the system for one agency: the Foreign Agriculture Service.

The provision required the State Department to obtain FAS approval to sell property originally purchased to house FAS employees overseas. Moreover, FAS gained the right to occupy new residences permanently.

That provision created an exception for one agency, an exception that if copied by other agencies would disrupt the equitable management of overseas property. Overseas property management would lose much needed flexibility and make the housing of overseas personnel more difficult and costly.

At my request, GAO looked into this matter. In a July 11th letter, GAO concluded the "restrictions on the sales of residences purchased for agricultural attachés do not appear to be in the government's best interests. As the single manager for overseas property, State is responsible for implementing cost-effective decisions about the sale of unneeded overseas real estate and using sales proceeds for the government's highest priorities. . . . [T]he restrictions weaken efforts to improve management of the government's overseas properties and conflict with congressional and executive branch efforts to establish State as the single real property manager."

The properties at issue are not just regular old houses. In Cairo, the residence is a 4,200-square-foot, two-level house with four bedrooms, three bathrooms, two living rooms, a dining room, two kitchens, a sunroom, a breakfast room, and terraces. In Vienna, the residence is a 3,500-square-foot, three-story villa with six bedrooms, three bathrooms, a terrace, breakfast room, basement, and garage. Both houses exceed established housing standards.

This unsound FAS exception is delaying the sale of these valuable properties, a sale that could net at least $2.1 million. The provision may also complicate the sale of other properties, such as an underutilized property in Bangkok worth $50 million.

The State Department manages 3,500 properties in more than 220 locations overseas and has had the authority to sell those properties since 1926. Proceeds from sales are used to acquire and maintain other properties. In the wake of the 1998 embassy bombings in Kenya and Tanzania and other terrorist attacks, proceeds from these sales are used to ensure the safety of our embassies and personnel abroad. Providing special treatment to FAS prevents the State Department from implementing some of the measures necessary to protect our diplomatic personnel.

Mr. Speaker, the letter from GAO, "Current Law Limits the State Department's Authority to Manage Certain Overseas Properties Cost Effectively" (GAO–02–790R, July 11, 2001) follows. A more complete version of the letter is available at http://www.gao.gov/new.items/d02790r.pdf.

U.S. GENERAL ACCOUNTING OFFICE,
Washington, DC, July 11, 2002.

Hon. CHRISTOPHER SHAYS,
Chairman, Subcommittee on National Security, Veterans Affairs, and International Relations, Committee on Government Reform, House of Representatives.

Subject: Current Law Limits the State Department's Authority to Manage Certain Overseas Properties Cost Effectively

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Department of State is the central manager for real estate at U.S. embassies and consulates and has the statutory authority to sell properties and use the sales proceeds to acquire and maintain other overseas properties. Section 738 in the fiscal year 2001 Agriculture Appropriations Act prohibits State from selling residences purchased to house agricultural attachés without approval from the Foreign Agricultural Service (FAS) and requires the department to use the proceeds from such sales to purchase residences for these attachés. Legislation currently before the Congress would repeal section 738.

At your request, this report discusses the effect of section 738 on State's management of overseas properties. We examined this issue as part of our review of the Department of State's performance in identifying and selling unneeded overseas real estate. In conducting this assignment, we interviewed officials and analyzed records at the Department of State, FAS, and the Office of Management and Budget (OMB).

RESULTS IN BRIEF

Section 738 limits the Department of State's authority to implement cost-effective decisions about sales of unneeded overseas property and the use of sales proceeds. Because of section 738's restrictions, State has delayed two property sales valued at nearly $4 million that appear to be in the government's best interests. FAS is concerned that if section 738 is repealed, selling these properties will result in increased costs for FAS since it would have to lease housing for attachés who previously lived rent-free in government-owned housing. State acknowledges that this could occur but save its financial analysis shows that selling the houses benefits the government as a whole. Although section 738 applies only to residences purchased for agricultural section 738 applies only to residences purchased for agricultural attachés, OMB and State are concerned that it could lead to fragmented and less cost-effective management of overseas property if other agencies seek similar treatment for their senior representatives. In our view, section 738's restrictions do not appear to be in the government's best interests.

This report suggests that the Congress may wish to consider repealling section 738. State officials, commenting on a draft of this report, said they agreed with the report's information and conclusions regarding the negative effects of section 738 on overseas property management. FAS officials reiterated their view that repealing section 738 could result in increased costs for FAS. We believe that if the section's repeal and sale of residences used by agricultural attachés increases FAS costs, the Department of Agriculture can request that the Congress consider providing additional funds for FAS operations.

BACKGROUND

The Foreign Buildings Act of 1926, as amended, authorizes the Secretary of State to sell overseas properties that are used to support diplomatic and consular operations in foreign countries. The Department of State manages about 3,500 government-owned properties—including embassy and consular office buildings, housing, and land—at more than 220 overseas locations. The law authorizes the Secretary to use the proceeds from the sale of overseas properties to acquire and maintain other overseas properties and requires the Secretary to report such transactions to the Congress with the department's annual budget estimates. The Secretary has delegated this authority to State's Bureau of Overseas Building Operations.

Over the years, as a result of congressional and OMB actions, overseas property management has been consolidated under State. In 1978, the Congress endorsed State as the single manager for overseas property and asked OMB to prepare a proposal for implementing this concept. In 1979, OMB issued a report that supported the concept of single management and acquisition planning for overseas property under State. OMB noted that the Congress was strengthening and broadening State's existing role as the central manager for overseas property. In 1990, the Congress directed State to establish and implement a uniform housing policy for agencies' overseas personnel. Resulting new overseas housing regulations, issued in 1991 and 1992 with the agreement of the foreign affairs agencies and the Department of Defense, reinforced State's authority to act as the single manager for overseas property. These authorities show that the Congress and the executive branch had intended that State should manage overseas property in a consolidated, integrated manner and that doing so would be in the government's best interests. We have supported this concept since the 1960s because it is more effective, efficient, and economical than having multiple property managers.

Since 1997, State has increased efforts to identify and sell unneeded overseas real estate in response to congressional direction and our recommendations. As part of this effort, State sold two residences occupied by agricultural attachés for about $855,000 and proposed selling three others for more than $4 million. FAS argued that these properties were purchased to house its attachés; and consequently, FAS should have a say in approving the sales and in determining how the sales proceeds should be used. As a result, FAS sought and the Congress enacted legislation that requires State to obtain FAS approval to sell residences purchased to house agricultural attachés. Additionally, State must use the proceeds from such sales to acquire other suitable residences for agricultural attachés (not necessarily at the same post), and FAS has the right to occupy these properties permanently. According to FAS, State manages 13 properties purchased for agricultural attachés.

SECTION 738 LIMITS STATE'S AUTHORITY TO MAKE COST-EFFECTIVE DECISIONS ON CERTAIN PROPERTIES

Section 738 of the fiscal year 2001 Agriculture Appropriations Act limits State's authority to sell unneeded property by making sales decisions contingent on FAS approval. Proposed sales of residences in Cairo, Egypt, and Vienna, Austria, illustrate the potential limitations. Although selling these properties appears to be in the U.S. government's best interests, State has postponed these sales because of concerns about section 738. In October 1998, the State Inspector General reported that the Cairo and Vienna residences were larger than housing standards allow, were underutilized, and should be sold. According to State records, the Cairo residence is a 4,200-square-foot, two-level house with four bedrooms, three bathrooms, two living rooms, a dining room, two kitchens, a sunroom, a breakfast room, and terraces. The Vienna residence is a 3,500-square-foot, three-story villa with six bedrooms, three bathrooms, a terrace, breakfast room, basement, and garage. These residences are larger than the housing standards allow. Figures 1 and 2 show photographs of the Cairo and Vienna residences.

State financial analyses suggest that selling the Cairo and Vienna residences would yield net benefits for the government of at least $2.1 million. In addition, using a measure of investment performance, State determined that selling the two residences was a substantially more efficient use of government resources than continued ownership. In February 2001, FAS informed State that it approved the sale of the Vienna residence on condition that the sales proceeds were used to purchase a replacement residence in Vienna and new residences for agricultural attachés at two other posts. Because FAS's proposed use of the proceeds would not address the government's highest priority overseas property needs, State officials decided to postpone the Vienna sale pending repeal of section 738. State subsequently postponed the Cairo sale for the same reason.

State and OMB believe that the sales proceeds should be used to meet the government's highest priority needs. According to its long-range facilities plan, State seeks to reinvest sales proceeds where there is the greatest need or the most opportunity to reduce government operating costs. This plan notes that, in recent years, most sales proceeds have been earmarked for specific capital construction projects, such as building secure embassies. In future years, State plans to use sales proceeds to purchase additional residential housing. Within this broad priority, State plans to direct these proceeds to several objectives: (1) Buying residential properties in locations that offer the greatest rent savings to contain leasing costs, (2) buying earthquake resistant residential properties in seismic areas to address safety issues, and (3) buying key diplomatic properties. Although we did not assess State's priorities or use of proceeds from property sales, its approach is consistent with recommendations we made in 1996 regarding using sales proceeds for the highest priority overseas facility needs.

FAS believes that the sales proceeds should be used to purchase replacement and additional residences for agricultural attachés—not to purchase properties according to State's priorities. FAS said that past sales had displaced two of its attachés from government-owned housing, forcing it to pay about $400,000 over the past 5 years to lease replacement residences. FAS is concerned about having to cut its program budgets to fund additional leases for replacement housing. In addition, FAS complained that it had insufficient advance notice of the proposed sales and had difficulty freeing up funds to pay for replacement housing for displaced attachés.

State acknowledged that FAS may have to lease replacement residences if section 738 is repealed and the two residences are sold. However, financial analyses of the proposed sales considered these costs in determining that they were cost effective for the government. State also acknowledged that unanticipated sales could cause short-term budgetary disruptions. As a result, in June 2001, assuming repeal of section 738, State offered to pay for leasing replacement housing until FAS could build these costs into its budget in cases where State disposed of the properties with less than 2 years' advance notice. In January 2002, FAS responded that, before agreeing to any sales, it would require State to provide appropriate government-owned replacement housing within 2 years and expect State to make every effort to ensure that sales did not affect FAS's budget. FAS's letter did not address the repeal of section 738. In April 2002, FAS officials told us they were reluctant to accept State's offer because it did not address the long-term budgetary effect of the sales and allowed State to retain control over the use of the sales proceeds.

According to State, if section 738 remained in effect, it could be a complicating factor in the future sale of a compound in downtown Bangkok that could be worth as much as $50 million. In 1998, the State Inspector General reported that the compound—a 15-acre wooded site located in a prime commercial area that contains five executive residences (one occupied by the agricultural attaché) and several other facilities—was underutilized and should be sold. Before the 1997 Asian financial crisis, State had planned to sell the compound and use the proceeds to finance the construction of new facilities at the post, including housing for more than 200 embassy families that would reduce post lease costs by about $73 million over 10 years. Recognizing the changed economic conditions, State reported that further study is needed to determine the appropriate time to sell the compound and the appropriate use of the sales proceeds.

State and OMB Support Repealing Section 738; FAS Opposes Its Repeal

State and OMB support legislation currently before the Congress that would repeal section 738. They argue that its restrictions on State's authority seriously weaken centralized management of overseas properties because they essentially establish a separate executive housing program for FAS and subordinate governmentwide priorities to agency priorities. For example, FAS could disapprove the sale of oversize or high-value residences purchased for agricultural attachés while State was selling residences purchased for ambassadors, deputy chiefs of mission, consuls general, and senior representatives of other foreign affairs agencies. State reported that, between 1997 and 2002, it sold 17 executive residences for about $38 million and is planning to sell 15 additional residences for about $20 million. Additionally, State and OMB pointed out that other foreign affairs agencies and Defense have experienced budgetary effects from the sale of such residences. In these cases, agencies must weigh housing costs in deciding whether to station their employees overseas. State and OMB are also concerned that unless section 738 is repealed, other agencies may seek similar legislation, leading to more fragmented property management and unequal and uneconomical housing policies at taxpayer expense.

FAS opposes repealing section 738. FAS argues that section 738 maintains Agriculture's entitlement to residences purchased to house its attachés. FAS believes that repealing section 738 would allow State to ignore what FAS believes was the Congress' intent in providing funds to purchase these residences, while imposing substantial budgetary costs on FAS.

CONCLUSIONS

Section 738's restrictions on the sales of residences purchased for agricultural attachés do not appear to be in the government's best interests. As the single manager for overseas property, State is responsible for implementing cost-effective decisions about the sale of unneeded overseas real estate and using sales proceeds for the government's highest priorities. However, for residences purchased to house agricultural attachés, implementation of State's decisions is contingent on FAS approval and priorities. Although its analysis shows that selling the Vienna and Cairo residences would be financially advantageous to the government, State does not plan to proceed with these sales if section 738 remains in force. We recognize that, if section 738 is repealed, selling these residences may affect FAS's budget. However, FAS's budgetary concerns need to be weighed against the government's overall benefits from these sales—which include disposing of unneeded property and reinvesting the proceeds where they provide the greatest return. In addition, the restrictions weaken efforts to improve management of the government's overseas properties and conflict with congressional and executive branch efforts to establish State as the single real property manager.

MATTER FOR CONGRESSIONAL CONSIDERATION

In light of our findings, Congress may wish to consider repealing section 738 of the fiscal year 2001 Agriculture Appropriations Act.

AGENCY COMMENTS AND OUR EVALUATION

State officials, commenting on a draft of this report, said the report fairly and accurately represents their positions on the negative effects of section 738 and the reasons they support its repeal. They said it is in the government's interest to have a single property manager with the authority to sell unneeded properties and reinvest the proceeds where they will produce the greatest benefits. State officials reiterated their concern that, by according FAS special treatment, section 738 threatens the centralized management of overseas property and is unfair to the staff of other foreign affairs agencies and Defense.

FAS official reiterated their concern that repealing section 738 could result in additional annual lease costs for FAS and that FAS would need additional budget resources to maintain its current level of services overseas, FAS officials also questioned whether section 738 would fragment overseas property management, stating that only Defense was in a position to assert similar claims to overseas housing.

We continue to believe that, in considering whether to repeal section 738, budgetary concerns need to be weighed against the government's interests in selling these residences and maintaining a single property manager with the authority to sell unneeded properties and reinvest the proceeds where they will produce the greatest benefits. If the section's repeal and subsequent property sales increase FAS costs, Agriculture can request that Congress consider providing more funds for FAS operations. Additionally, we agree with State that section 738 accords FAS preferential treatment and that other foreign affairs agencies and Defense will likely seek similar treatment for their overseas executives. We believe this would weaken centralized overseas property management, which we have long supported because it is more effective, efficient, and economical than an noncentralized approach.

SCOPE AND METHODOLOGY

To determine the effect of section 738 on State's management of overseas property, we analyzed applicable laws, regulations, and guidance that provide State's authority to sell properties and use the proceeds. Key laws, regulations, and guidance include the Foreign Buildings Act, section 738 of the fiscal year 2001 Agriculture Foreign Affairs Manual. We also examined past GAO and State Inspector General reports on overseas property management. We analyzed State and FAS records that summarized their assessment of the effect of section 738 on State's authority to buy and sell overseas properties and act as the single manager for overseas property. We discussed section 738's effect with appropriate State, FAS, and OMB officials. We examined State's rationale for selling the properties in Cairo, Vienna, and other locations, including State's financial analyses of the proposed sales, OMB guidance on evaluating asset sales, and State's fiscal year 2002 to 2007 long-range buildings plan. We did not access the accuracy or reliability of the property appraisals or other underlying data used in State's analyses or the priorities and objectives in its long-range plan.

We conducted this review from April to July 2002 in accordance with generally accepted government auditing standards.

We are sending copies of this report to other interested congressional committees, the Secretaries of Agriculture and State, the FAS Director, State's Director of Overseas Buildings Operations, OMB, and other interested parties. Mr. MENENDEZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise in reluctant support of this important legislation. I say "reluctant", not because of what is in the bill, but because of what is not in the bill. This bill could have been a much better product, and it strongly underscores why the American people should think long and hard about which party should be in control of this great institution come November.

It is unconscionable that we are debating this bill today only because Speaker HASTERT and Majority Whip DELAY threatened to throw this entire bill in the waste can unless it excluded a non-binding, "Sense of the Congress" resolution stating merely that the United States should re-engage in the international effort to reduce the greenhouse gas emissions that have led to global warming. Were this to continue unabated, the consequences could be so dramatic that we can barely imagine them today.

The language that was forcibly removed by the Speaker and the Majority Whip already was passed by the full House. Its arbitrary removal by the anti-environmental House Republican leadership shows not only how radical things have gotten around here, but more importantly that they do not want the American people to know anything about their radical, anti-environmental agenda—certainly not with just over a month before the mid-term elections.

Second, the perennial underfunding of State Department operations had become a international embarrassment due to the shortsighted cuts forced by our friends on the other side of the aisle. Now we can say that some relief is on the way, although many Americans would be embarrassed to see the awful conditions of some of our diplomatic facilities abroad. Let me remind the all too-eager hawks in the Majority and in the Administration that diplomacy is truly the first line of defense.

Second, I am glad to have joined with my colleague from Alabama, Mr. HILLIARD, the Congressional Black Caucus and the Asian-Pacific American Caucus, in developing language in this bill to ensure that the State Department makes progress in its recruitment and promotion of minorities to its senior-most ranks. Our language makes clear that Congress is looking for results in the recruitment and promotion of minority professionals. It provides $2 million to increase minority recruitment in the Department and requires the Department to track its results with a database.

The General Accounting Office (GAO) reported in a long-term study that despite years of effort from Congress, the State Department has failed to make any significant progress in the recruitment and promotion of qualified minorities to senior management positions. For example, the State Department—along with the Federal Emergency Management Agency—actually promoted fewer minority managers in 1999 than in 1990.

While having more minorities take the foreign service exam is a step in the right direction, that is but a small step, and only one among many more steps needed, to rectify the severe under-representation of qualified Hispanic Americans, African Americans and Asian-Pacific Americans in the foreign affairs agencies. All three caucuses join together to urge President Bush and Secretary of State Powell to ensure that we, at long last, get on with the business of obtaining results in minority recruitment and promotion at the State Department and the foreign affairs agencies.

If the State Department is to make progress, minorities must have a seat at the table. And that means, among other things, a seat at the table at the promotion boards and the selection boards—the entities that placed officers in senior positions. We will look for results and we will continue with these efforts until we see results.

Third, this bill includes the "Iran Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act", a bill I first introduced in 1998, and whose passage could not be more timely than today. In response to Iran's efforts to develop the Bushehr nuclear power plant in the Persian Gulf, the language I introduced requires the U.S. to withhold proportional assistance to the International Atomic Energy Agency (IAEA) for programs and projects of the Agency that go toward the development of the Bushehr plant if the Secretary of State were to determine that it is inconsistent with US nonproliferation policy, helps Iran develop nuclear weapons expertise, or is a cover of acquisition of sensitive technology. We must keep a watchful eye on IAEA activities in Iran—one of the nations that President Bush singled out as part of the "axis of evil" that threatens our way of life. While I have no interest in cutting off all IAEA assistance to Iran, it is ludicrous for the U.S. to support—even indirectly—a plant which clearly poses a threat to the United States and to stability in the Middle East.

Finally, this bill provides language I was glad to sponsor to provide the National Endowment for Democracy (NED) with a modest increase for the first time in years. This vital and cost-effective organization promotes the fundamental American values of democracy and human rights abroad. By leading many efforts in the struggle for freedom worldwide, NED enjoys strong bipartisan support as it advances our national security. From Lech Walesa in Poland to Nelson Mandela in South Africa to human rights activists in Nigeria to civil society leaders in Mexico, NED and it core institutes have assisted grassroots organizations that have helped bring about peaceful transitions to democracy.

Mr. Speaker, despite the outrage committed by the majority on global warming, for the reasons I have mentioned, I urge my colleagues to support this bill.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report to accompany H.R. 1646, the Foreign Relations Authorization Act.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset, I want to commend Chairman HYDE and Ranking Member LANTOS for their diligent efforts in producing a bill which will truly assist in the conduct of our foreign affairs.

There are a few specific provisions in the conference agreement which I would like to draw attention to. The first is the Middle East Peace Commitments Act. This section requires the President to report to Congress on the Palestinians adherence to their commitments to resolve their conflict with Israel through exclusively non-violent means. If the President cannot report to Congress that the Palestinians are complying with their commitments to peace, and unless the President utilizes a national security waiver, the legislation requires the imposition of one or more of following sanctions: the denial of visas to PLO and Palestinian Authority officials; the downgrading of the status of the PLO office in Washington; the designation of the PLO, the PA, or any of their constituent groups or arms as Foreign Terrorist Organizations; or the cutoff of all non-humanitarian aid to the West Bank and Gaza.

Mr. Speaker, the problem with the U.S. policy to date isn't that we're disengaged—far from it. The problem is that for all our effort, we haven't gotten any commitment to peace from the Palestinians. It doesn't seem to matter how many envoys and senior policy makers the President sends to meet with Palestinian leaders, these visits have failed to produce any change in Palestinian behavior. With the adoption of these sanctions, Congress is sending a strong message to the Palestinians that America's never-ending supply of last-chances has run out.

Another important provision in the conference report concerns Taiwan. Last year, President Bush altered arms sales discussions between the U.S. and Taiwan from once a year to an as needed basis. The experience with this policy has thus far been satisfactory and has removed a major irritant in U.S.-PRC relations by removing the focus an annual meeting between the U.S. and Taiwan provides. However, in order to ensure Congress's historic role in assessing Taiwan's defense needs under the Taiwan Relations Act, the bill requires that the Administration consult with the Congress twice annually regarding Taiwan's defense needs. This provision will ensure that the Congress retains its unique role in determining the types and quantity of defense articles and services that should be provided to Taiwan.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, the conference report authorizes the final payment of our U.N. arrearage. For too long the late payment of our dues has set an example for other nations to follow and has caused serious budget problems for the U.N. At a time when the President has challenged the United Nations to be a forceful advocate for peace and security, or risk irrelevance, it helps for us to demonstrate that we support the U.N. by putting our money where our mouth is.

Mr. Speaker, I commend Chairman HYDE and Ranking Member LANTOS for their extraordinary work on this measure and I urge my colleagues to support the conference report.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, Section 1601 of the State Department Authorization Conference Agreement addresses nuclear missile nonproliferation in South Asia. I have reservations about the provision. U.S.—India relations are strong and both countries are looking forward to an enhancement and expansion of their economic, political and strategic potential. The engagement between our two nations continues to be mutually beneficial. In light of this tangible bilateral progress being made, and India's long-standing commitment to regional and global peace and security, provisions of Section 601 create an unnecessary diversion in the steadily strengthening bilateral relationship between the U.S. and India.

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DAN MILLER of Florida). Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the conference report.

There was no objection.

The conference report was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RES. 543, EXPRESSING SENSE OF HOUSE THAT CONGRESS SHOULD COMPLETE ACTION ON H.R. 4019, MAKING MARRIAGE TAX RELIEF PERMANENT

Mr. SESSIONS. By direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 547 and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 547

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the resolution (H. Res. 540) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should complete action on H.R. 3762, the Pension Security Act of 2002. The resolution shall be considered as read for amendment. The resolution shall be debatable for one hour equally divided among and controlled by the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committees on Education and the Workforce and Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to final adoption without intervening motion.

SEC. 2. Upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the resolution (H. Res. 544) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on permanency of pension reform provisions. The resolution shall be considered as read for amendment. The resolution shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to final adoption without intervening motion.

SEC. 3. Upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider in the House the resolution (H. Res. 543) expressing the sense of the House that Congress should complete action on H.R. 4019, making marriage tax relief permanent. The resolution shall be considered as read for amendment. The resolution shall be debatable for one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the resolution to final adoption without intervening motion.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume. During consideration of this resolution, all time yielded is for purposes of debate only.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution before us is a closed rule that allows for consideration of three important resolutions.

The rule provides for 1 hour of debate, equally divided among and controlled by the respective chairmen and ranking members of the committees of jurisdiction.

Mr. Speaker, the trio of resolutions before us today represents some of the most pressing needs for average Americans across the Nation. In politics, we often try to put a personal face to a problem that is being debated or addressed. Mr. Speaker, the face of our story today is just the average American, the average American who is a family member, a friend, a neighbor. It is a person who has worked hard and tried to invest wisely so that he or she can enjoy a retirement of independence.

The first of these resolutions, House Resolution 540, expresses the sense of the House that Congress should complete action on and present to the President before adjournment the Pension Security Act of 2002.

Although the House passed this measure more than 150 days ago by a strong bipartisan vote, the Senate has not taken up comprehensive pension protection that includes safeguards and options to help American workers preserve and enhance their retirement security.

Over the last year, we have witnessed the unraveling and breakdown of major corporations such as Enron. While Enron workers were likely victims of criminal wrongdoing, there is no question that they were most definitely the victims of outdated Federal pension laws.

The tragedy of Enron was two-fold. In addition to decimating the savings of employees, it has also undermined the confidence of American workers in this country's pension system.

The Pension Security Act includes new options and resources for workers, as well as greater accountability from companies and senior-level executives. Employees would be given new freedoms to sell and diversify company stock. The bill also creates parity between senior corporate executives and rank-and-file workers. This will help to prevent a repeat occurrence of the egregious disparity that allowed Enron executives to sell their investments and preserve their savings while rank-and-file workers were barred from making changes.

The bill also includes provisions that would ensure that employees receive accurate and timely information, along with sound advice and resources to make informed investment decisions. Mr. Speaker, let me be very clear about this: each day that we delay in enacting the Pension Security Act is another day that we leave worker retirement savings vulnerable to corporate meltdowns.

The second resolution we will consider is House Resolution 544, which expresses the sense of the House that Congress should complete work on the Retirement Savings Security Act of 2002. The tax relief package that was enacted last year included provisions that increased contribution limits for IRA and 401(k)-type plans to make it easier for companies, and particularly small businesses, to offer a retirement savings plan.

Currently, half of the Nation's workforce, roughly 70 million Americans, do not have a 401(k) plan or any other kind of pension. At the same time, much of the workforce is quickly approaching retirement. The provision enacted last year addressing this growing concern by allowing all workers to set aside more in their own retirement and IRA plans was important. I am proud of what this House did. Special considerations were also given to workers over 50 years old who were allowed to so-called "catch up" or accelerate contributions so that they can build up their retirement nest egg more quickly.

One group that will be particularly helped by this is women, women who come to work many times after raising their children, many times later in life.

This tax relief package also included provisions that modernize pension laws. Workers are now able to enjoy the benefits that come from having a portable defined contribution plan and are also allowed to vest in their plans more quickly.

So one might ask: What is the problem? The problem, Mr. Speaker, is that all of these very good benefits enjoyed by the American worker are set to expire on December 31, 2010, because of an arcane Senate rule. Consequently, Americans will have a difficult time planning for the future.

In order to prevent a massive overnight tax increase, this past June the House passed a bill that would make these provisions permanent on a strongly bipartisan vote of 308 to 70. The American worker is calling for these reforms to be made permanent, and the President is ready and willing to sign these significant retirement security provisions. We just need to go through the legislative process that involves both parties here in the Capitol. This measure, too, has also not been taken up by the other body.

The last resolution addresses similarly important tax relief that is put in jeopardy by the aforementioned Senate rule. House Resolution 543 is a measure expressing the sense of the House that Congress should complete action on H.R. 4019, making marriage tax relief permanent.

Because of the Senate rule, the provisions that give relief to married couples from an additional tax burden are set to expire at the end of the year 2010. The Senate has not acted on making marriage tax relief permanent. Without enacting a law making marriage tax relief permanent at the start of the year 2011, the nearly 36 million couples in the Nation would be subject once again to this fundamentally unfair tax solely because they are married. If this provision is not made permanent, married couples across America will once again be subject to this unfair tax that is an affront to the most basic institution of marriage.

The Committee on Ways and Means report also notes that "failure to make permanent marriage penalty tax relief would result in a $17 billion tax increase for low- and middle-income married taxpayers in the year 2011, followed by a $25 billion tax increase in the year 2012."

Mr. Speaker, I look forward to debate on these three resolutions, which give the House the opportunity to once again reaffirm its commitment to the American workers and their families.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair most recently ruled on September 19, 2002, Members are reminded to confine their remarks to factual references to the other body and avoid characterizations of Senate rules, Senate action or inaction, remarks urging Senate action or inaction, or references to particular Senators.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule and the three meaningless sense of the House resolutions it will bring to the floor represent a complete abdication of leadership by House Republicans.

On the front page of today's New York Times, the Census Bureau reports that the number of people living in poverty has increased, the median household income has decreased, and Americans are suffering under the weakest economy in 50 years. But congressional Republicans are fiddling about, cynically playing politics in order to run out the clock before the November elections.

The majority leadership should be ashamed of itself, Mr. Speaker. Republicans refuse to do the most basic job that they were elected to do: fund the Federal Government. House Republicans have passed only five of the 13 appropriation bills, and the fiscal year ends in less than 1 week.

Later today, or perhaps tomorrow, or perhaps some day next week, we will pass the first of several continuing resolutions to keep the government operating. But instead of working overtime to do their most fundamental job, Republican leaders are worried about their own political power, so they are wasting time on the meaningless bipartisan propaganda that these resolutions represent.

Never have I seen such timidity, timidity from the Republican leadership. Meanwhile, long-term unemployment is at an 8 percent high, and 2 million Americans have lost their jobs. Consumer confidence is at its lowest level since November of 2001, and prescription drug prices are still sky high, leaving senior citizens unable to afford vital prescription medicine.

Mr. Speaker, corporate scandals, the massive criminality at Enron, WorldCom, and the like have rocked the economy and devastated retirement plans of millions of Americans; but House Republicans overwhelmingly voted against real pension protection legislation a few months ago, blocking Democratic efforts to protect Americans' retirement plans.

Just yesterday, the Dow hit a 4-year low. The NASDAQ is at a 6-year low. Overall, the stock market has lost $4.5 trillion in value since Republicans took control in Washington a year ago January.

How have Republicans responded, Mr. Speaker? Last week they wasted the taxpayers' time and money on two utterly meaningless resolutions. This week they are doing it again, issuing a rule that brings three more utterly meaningless resolutions to the House floor, since we have already passed these bills that are the subject of these resolutions.

Mr. Speaker, in case anyone has any doubt as to the substantive significance of the resolutions on the floor today, let me tell the Members how we got here. Originally, Republicans had one meaningless resolution on the schedule for today. Apparently, however, that would not waste enough time, so in the middle of the Committee on Rules meeting yesterday evening, Republicans happened to mention that they were going to add two more meaningless resolutions. Then they told us that they had to adjourn the committee until the new resolutions had been written.

Mr. Speaker, this is a shameful failure to lead. It demonstrates an embarrassing intellectual bankruptcy on the part of the Republican Party. They have given up on addressing the real priorities of the American people and turned the House floor into a propaganda arm of the Republican National Committee.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I pose a simple question to my Republican colleagues: Are they afraid to do the job their constituents elected them to do? If not, I urge them to join Democrats in opposing the previous question.

If we defeat the previous question, we will amend the rule to bring to the floor real corporate accountability legislation offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI), the ranking member of the Subcommittee on Social Security. The Matsui measure would ensure that big corporations treat their employees the same way they treat their favorite executives: if the CEO gets a guaranteed pension, then so should the front line employees; if the company restricts employees who want to change their 401(k) plans, then it should restrict CEOs who want to cash in their stock options.

The Matsui bill embodies the values that President Bush set forth months ago. If it is good enough for the captain, it is good enough for the crew.

I urge my Republican friends to join us in defeating the previous question so this House can finally address the corporate scams that have hurt so many employees and investors.

By the way, it might be nice if the Republicans would also bring the eight appropriation bills that are still languishing in committee to the floor. They have utterly failed to do the job that they were sent here to do.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

☐ 1600

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. BALLENGER), a member of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, over the last year thousands of Americans employed by Enron, WorldCom, Adelphia and others have watched helplessly as their companies collapsed and their retirement savings evaporated. In response, President Bush called on Congress to act in a bipartisan fashion to restore confidence in our Nation's pension and retirement security system, and I am not ashamed to say more than 150 days ago the House did its part by passing a comprehensive pension protection bill that protects workers from losing their retirement savings in Enron-style corporate meltdowns.

The House passed the Pension Security Act to protect workers' retirements by stopping harmful inside trader moves. It gives workers new freedoms to diversify their retirement savings in 3 years and allows workers to receive sound investment advice about their retirement plans. American workers deserve no less than this from Congress. And also we need to support a 401(k) continuation and permanent renewal of the marriage penalty. The Senate has not passed any protection bill; and by supporting this bill rule, you are standing up for American workers.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI).

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from the State of Texas (Mr. FROST), the ranking member on the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, what we are really doing here today is passing three resolutions that the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) said were absolutely meaningless, and I would have to say that they are probably less than absolutely meaningless.

The first resolution deals with a bill that was passed some months ago basically asking that the Senate act on it. Now, the way I would do this is you just go walk over to the Senate side, which takes about 5 minutes, and just suggest that perhaps they bring the bill up, and if they will not bring the bill up ask them why and then you will find out why because the bill that passed the House is somewhat meaningless.

The same thing on the second resolution. You want to make something permanent that will not take effect until 8 years from now. And so why talk about asking the Senate to take this bill up now when we are talking about something 8 years from now? We do not even know how this bill will work.

The last one is on the marriage penalty, again doing something that will take 8 years from now. What is odd is that we should really be addressing the shortfall on Social Security, but because the Republicans want to privatize Social Security, they want to wait until after the elections because they know they are getting really torpedoed on this. They do not want to talk about Social Security. They have a prescription drug proposal that will privatize Medicare and, obviously, that cannot pass the other body because it is so extreme that that is not going to happen.

You can go on and on and on. One of reasons the appropriations bills are not being brought up is even though the President had a wonderful Rose Garden ceremony, signing ceremony, on the education bill, Leave No Children Behind, he falls $7 billion short in actually funding that bill, which would make it impossible to implement it and create chaos in every school district in America.

So we know what is happening. We know why we are spending hours of time on this floor of this body talking about resolutions. The easiest thing in the world, as I said, is just go on the other side. Talk to these people on the other side. Do not send resolutions and waste their time.

What is really offensive is let us take the first piece of legislation that we are talking about, the first resolution. I will tell you how meaningless it is. They have basically two parts of this bill: The Boehner-Thomas bill which is supposed to really address the Enron pension problems. The first one basically says that no employee can actually sell company stock for 3 to 5 years from the date of receipt. Now, that does not mean anything from the top level management employees; the executives like Ken Lay could still sell any time they want. They get a stock option. So this does not really help the employees of these companies.

The second part of it is even more silly when you think about it. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) talked about investment advice. The only trouble is the investment advice will come from the same people that are administering the program. So you take Enron, it would have been the Enron pension managers that would have been giving investment advice to the Enron employees. Now, what do you think they are going to say? Do not buy Enron stock? Of course not. It is silly.

But you say, we do have a provision that you have to disclose a conflict of interest. Sure, that is a lot of help. That is what this bill does. It is somewhat meaningless. That is why the other body has a rough time wanting to take this up.

The bill I would like to offer and the bill we really should be debating, you can vote against it, but let us bring it to the floor so that the American public will know our values, what we stand for, exactly who does want to solve those problems. What our bill will do is basically, let us take, for example, the whole issue of diversification, the first issue about Enron employees having in their 401(k) plans Enron stock. Essentially what we would provide is that the executive employees like Ken Lay and Skilling and those folks would not be able to sell their stocks if in fact there are impediments to the employees having to sell their stocks. And if they do sell their stocks and breach the general company-wide prohibition in terms of time limits, they would just have to pay a capital gains tax that is larger than the capital gains tax they will pay now. They will have to pay a 50 percent capital gains tax. That should be a disincentive then for them to sell these stocks or at least perhaps open it up so their employees can sell their stocks.

Secondly, we all know what has been going on, and finally I think the Jack Welch situation became public knowledge about a month ago. A lot of retired top executives and CEOs get millions and millions of dollars of perks. Not only do they get wonderful pension programs, but they also get tickets free to sporting games on the front row. They get apartment complexes. They get their cleaning paid for. They get a corporate jet that is waiting for them. Millions of dollars worth of funds.

We know that they get these big benefits and we are not going to stop that. They are going to get them. But what we want is transparency. One of the reasons the market is falling apart, it was 11,700 when the President took office, and now it is down to 7,700. It lost 4,000 points in the last 2 years since President Bush has been President, about a 40 percent reduction in pension benefits.

The reason why there is no confidence in the stock market today is because there is no transparency, because the shareholders do not know what is actually being expensed. The shareholders of GE did not know that Jack Welch was actually spending millions and millions of dollars of monies that could have gone in the form of stock dividends. All we would do is just provide that when you give these benefits and perks to these top management people, that you notify the shareholders in writing. And then you allow the shareholders to vote as to whether or not they agree with it; and if they do not, these perks are not available. Very simple.

Why would anybody be opposed to that? You want transparency, you want fairness, and you want the shareholders to have their benefits. We cannot bring this bill on the floor because you, Republican leadership, will not allow us to. The American public needs to know that. Why should we not be allowed to do that?

Lastly, the whole issue of deferred compensation. Ken Lay did really well. After bankruptcy was filed, he was able to take millions of dollars in deferred compensation. You know why he was able to do it? Because he put it in a third party trust that was nontaxable to him; nontaxable trust monies of Enron money went into a third party trust. And when they filed bankruptcy, every employee of Enron corporation lost their 401(k)s and went from $100,000 to zero or whatever they had went down to zero. It was suffering, what these people went through. Ken Lay walked off with it. You know why? Because we have a provision in the Tax Code that needs to be changed because it allows a deferral of taxes, and at the same time with the third party trust he was able to take literally millions of dollars from his account.

We need a no vote on the motion on the previous question so we are able to bring up our legislation that will deal with these major points so the American public and the shareholders will understand exactly what is going on in corporate America.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today we were furthering this debate that we have had for quite some time. I completely understand where the Democrats are coming from. They completely understand where we are coming from. We would like an agenda that is going to help taxpayers. We want an agenda that will help investors. We want an agenda that will help this country to come back from the problems that it has had. But the bottom line is the consensus that these bills have represented, including just one of these bills, got 308 votes. It is a consensus about doing something that will work.

I understand how difficult it is to beat up the status quo, just beat it up. But the answers that the other side has, just like when they present their budget, it does not even come close to passing. The measures that they have time after time do not come close. But the provisions that we have put on the floor have virtually bipartisan agreement with over 308 people who vote for it.

These are the ideas that we bring back to the floor today. The ones that have received over 300 votes of this body, the votes that make a difference, the ideas that make sense. It is easy beating up these ideas. I understand that. I also understand a lot of the frustration that they have got. But now is the time for us to make sure that we are pushing these. These three provisions are important. Yes, it is true. Two of them simply make permanent the things at the end of 10 years that we passed in the past few years. But I believe they are very important and I believe they represent more than a consensus of this body. And that is why it makes sense that what we passed previously, that we will debate again.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), a member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for yielding me time; and I am pleased to talk about today the substance of some of the legislation before us.

The rule permits us to take up three bills. My understanding is today we will address two of them. They have just been mischaracterized in my view by my colleague from the other side of the aisle, and I just want to relate what they actually contain.

The first is H.R. 3762. This is the pension security bill. It passed the House with a vote of 255 to 163 with 46 Democrats supporting it. It does have a controversial amendment with regard to independent investment advice, but to say that it does nothing, which my colleague and friend from California (Mr. MATSUI) said earlier, is not accurate. Let me tell you just what it does.

It says to people who are currently in company plans who have 401(k)s, who get a match of stock from their employer, that they do not have to be in that stock for an unlimited period of time. Under current law if an employer wants to they can give a match under a 401(k) program and say, you can have that stock but you have got to keep it, and you can never get rid of it, because there is no current rule which says that employees, the workers, have the right to unload that stock. That is a bad situation.

What happened at Enron is they told people they had to be 50 years of age plus they have to have 10 years of service. So people literally got hold of that Enron stock and they did not have the ability to get it out of their retirement plan. That is current law. Enron could have said 65 instead of 50. They could have said 20 years of service. They chose 50 and 10.

So what this House did on a bipartisan basis is we said, Let us change these rules. Let us say that as soon as you are vested, and vesting is after 3 years of service, that is the current vesting rule. We moved it from 5 years down to 3 years in the Portman-Cardin legislation a couple years ago. As soon as someone is vested after 3 years, you can get rid of that stock. You can divest yourself of that corporate stock that that company has given you as a match. That is a huge difference. And to say that does nothing I think not only mischaracterizes the bill, but I think that is really unfair to the workers of America who want to have that flexibility. They want to have the choice. If they want to keep that stock, fine, they should be able to. But they should also have the choice to get out of it. And a lot of folks at Enron would have gotten out of it. So that is a big change from current law.

It is not something, frankly, the business community was wild about because they like the idea of giving corporate stock and tying people to that stock because they think that gives people more of a stake in that company. It enables them to have that stock be held. But we looked at it. We said it was fair. We decided to do it. The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) and I worked on that. The gentleman from North Dakota (Mr. POMEROY) and I worked on that and others. So to say it does nothing is just inaccurate.

Second, it provides better information to workers. That is something we agreed to on a bipartisan basis. It was not a controversial part of the bill. It does provide a lot more information and better information. For instance, now when somebody gets into a plan they have to be provided with advice that says diversify. Do not put all your eggs in one basket. A commonly accepted principle for retirement is you should not have all your eggs in one basket. People now have to be told that when they get into a plan. They also have to be told, not only when they get into it but on a quarterly basis, what that plan is doing.

That was not a requirement before this legislation. If we could get this out of the Senate, people would actually get quarterly statements telling them what is in their plan, what they have, how the plan is doing in plain English so they can actually have the kind of transparency that the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) talked about, and I could not agree with him more. Transparency is absolutely critical.

Finally, education. Choice and information are important, but we also need to give people more tools to be able to educate themselves about how to invest their retirement savings. I think there is a consensus on doing that. There is some controversy about one element here, but it is extremely important.

There are two provisions in the bill. One says that one should be able on a pretax basis to go out and get advice wherever one wants, up to 500 bucks. Just like one can get a pretax cafeteria plan for eyeglass coverage or some other benefit, one can get investment advice. Investment advice is not cheap. So it is important that people have the ability to go out to get that advice. That is something that the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) and I have put together in previous legislation; it is something this House passed.

Finally, it says that companies ought to be able to allow people to come into the company and provide advice to the employees. The employer has the option to do that under this bill. It is voluntary. If the person comes forward to offer advice, the person has to disclose whatever that person is doing including being involved in a company plan, if they are. It is subject to all fiduciary responsibilities that come with that. It has to be a certified individual. So their protection is in there, but the point is there are millions of American workers today, over 42 million of them are in 401(k)s and a lot of them are getting no advice at all. In fact, 65 percent of those workers tell us they want to get education. So this is what this bill does. It is pretty simple. It says people ought to have choice. They do not have it now. And until the Senate acts, they will not have it. They ought to have better information about their plan. They ought to have better education.

A couple of other really good provisions of the bill have already been passed in the corporate accountability bill. That dealt with the blackout period. Do my colleagues remember that issue with the Enron situation because they were changing plan administrators, there was a blackout where people could not sell their stock and yet the people at the top could and there was no notice of the blackout? This House passed legislation that is part of this bill that says 30-day notice, they have to tell people about a blackout and during the blackout, the corporate executives who are not even in the plan but have stock separately cannot sell their stock. What is good for the sailor is also good for the ship captain. That was that idea and that did pass as part of the corporate accountability bill, but it came out of this House and out of this legislation.

So what we are doing today may seem meaningless to some, but I think it is very important because it is important to the workers of America. It is to say to the United States Senate, look, we passed this thing back in April. We responded on a bipartisan basis in the House. It is time now for the United States Senate to help America's workers. Enough talk. We have got a bipartisan consensus on which way to go. We ought to get it done.

The second piece of legislation has to do with enabling people to put more in their retirement accounts, enable them to move their accounts from job to job, portability, and simplifying the rules for small business so that they can offer more accounts. We know for a fact that of the 75 million people in America who do not have any retirement savings plan at all, 75 million people are left out right now. Most of them work in small business. In fact, among small businesses, only 20 percent offer any kind of plan like a 401(k) or a similar plan. So this House, on a 308 to 70 vote and in the past on a 400 vote, passed this legislation.

And what we are saying here is we ought to now make that legislation permanent. It lets everybody save more for their retirement. It is good policy. It is already working. IRA contributions are up 25 percent this past year, and thank goodness, because some of that money is accounted for now and able to balance some of what is happening in the markets so that people have a little more retirement savings. So it is out there working. It is good policy.

Why do we think it ought to be made permanent? Because although it does not expire for 8 years, it is very difficult to plan. Most Americans are trying to plan for their retirement. They want to know that this thing is not going to expire in 8 years, which it does under the current legislation. Small businesses would like to plan. If someone is thinking about getting into a pension plan for the first time if they are one of those 80 percent of small businesses, Mom and Pop operations, and they are sort of scared about the cost and the burden of liabilities to this, we reduce some of these for them here but they are saying, gee, how do we know that if we get into this business we are not going to get knocked out of it in 8 years? We ought to make it permanent.

I hope this is something this House would agree on. We already had a vote on that in this House. All we are saying to the Senate is, please, instead of talking about this so much, let us do something. We have the ability to do something. We have a consensus on how to help every worker have a more secure retirement.

There may be other things that people would like to add. The gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) has talked about executive compensation. Those are important issues. We ought to address those issues. It will not help one person get a pension, I can tell you that. So let us focus on what we are about here, which is helping workers to be able to have a little nest egg for their retirement, have a little peace of mind so that when they retire, they have something to be able to use for their own retirement and pass along to their kids and grandkids. That is what we are doing today. It is very simple. I appreciate the time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I was listening to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas, a while ago; and he was talking about why we need to be voting on this today, and I think he is a little confused. I do not know, maybe he was sick the day they did the legislative process during freshman orientation. I do not know. But it sounded like he was talking about voting on a conference report. We do not have a conference report before us. We have a bill that has already passed the House, has not been taken up by the Senate. So it is meaningless to vote a second time on the same bill that has already passed the House when it has not been passed by the Senate, has not gone to conference, and has not come back to us. So this really is an extraordinary waste of everybody's time, the minority's time, the majority's time, and the taxpayers' time and money.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN).

Mr. CARDIN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support worker protection in the pension laws, but today is another wasted opportunity, another loss of an opportunity to do something positive in that direction. I strongly disagree with the partisan strategies of my Republican colleagues. We need Congress to act on pension protection. It has been a pleasure to work with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) on many of these pension issues. Yes, employees should have control over their assets in the 401(k) plan.

Yes, we need to give them advice on diversification and independent advice; and yes, we have to give them notice of blackout periods. All that is very important, but this rule, as the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) has pointed out, if it passes, will allow us to consider on this floor three meaningless resolutions. They do not even reenact what we did before. These are basically political statements more than action on the floor of this body.

Instead, we could have done something here today to make it more likely we would send legislation to the President accomplishing what we are talking about today. We still have that opportunity. If we defeat the previous question, then we will be able to bring forward an issue that is extremely important to the workers of this Nation, will help bring us closer to the other body and more likely that we will get legislation enacted this year.

Mr. Speaker, I refer to the fact that under current pension law, there is preferential treatment for top management over the rank-and-file workers of a defunct company. No one can justify that. If a company cannot pay its workers, if a company cannot pay its creditors, it should not be paying these lucrative agreements to its top management, the deferred compensations and the unqualified pension plans that allow these payments to continue even though the company is in bankruptcy; and that is what the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) is referring to. That is what we will be able to consider in this body if we defeat the previous question; and if we do that, we will not only be enacting the right policy, treating workers equally with top management and protecting their pension rights, but we also will make it more likely that we can get legislation enacted this year.

I urge my colleagues to listen to this debate. Why we continue to take up these resolutions that do absolutely nothing is beyond me. These are important issues. We all want to help workers. So why can we not use the time that is obviously available to us to do the work we have not done yet? We have not taken up the issue of protecting the rank and file versus the top management. Let us take that issue up during this time.

I urge my colleagues to defeat the previous question.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER), the sponsor of the Marriage Penalty Relief Act.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SESSIONS) for yielding me this time.

I rise in strong support of the rule. I urge a "yes" vote on the previous question because this is a pretty simple debate before us today. We are debating bringing up a measure that says we need to get our work done on making elimination of the marriage tax penalty permanent; and before I discuss this marriage tax penalty, I do want to commend my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) for their good work on the pension legislation that is also part of this rule debate, particularly for the inclusion of the 415 pension provisions which benefit over 10 million construction and building trades people across America.

Thankfully, President Bush had the leadership to sign that legislation into law; and unfortunately, it was a temporary measure, and just imagine what it would mean to working folks back home in our districts if the rug were pulled out from them if that provision were allowed to expire, what it means for a laborer in my district like Larry Core. That 415 provision means a doubling of his pension by removing those artificial caps that denied him the full pension that he earned and deserved.

I have often, like many of my colleagues, come to the floor and asked the very fair and basic issue of fairness, and that is, is it right, is it fair that under our Tax Code almost 42 million married working couples have suffered higher taxes historically just because they are married? It does not seem right, and it does not seem fair; but the average marriage tax penalty would be about $1,700.

Thankfully, this House, along with the Senate, and we obtained bipartisan support, succeeded in passing as part of the Bush tax cut legislation to eliminate the marriage tax penalty, helping 42 million married working couples, couples such as Jose and Magdalena Castillo, two laborers, two construction workers from Joliet, Illinois. They have a son and daughter, Eduardo and Carolina. They are good people. They work hard. They are pursuing the American dream, but they suffered the marriage tax penalty prior to President Bush signing the Bush tax cut into law.

Unfortunately, the Bush tax cut is temporary. It expires in a few years, so what that means for a couple such as Jose and Magdalena Castillo, who right now have the marriage tax penalty essentially eliminated, is they could end up paying in a few years about $1,700 more in higher taxes just because they are married; and I believe that there is bipartisan agreement in this House that it is wrong that a married couple who are both in the workforce, man and wife, should pay higher taxes. We saw that we had almost 60 Democrats join with every House Republican that rejected their leadership's call, and they voted with us in eliminating that marriage tax penalty.

We have before us today a rule which will allow us to bring up this coming week a measure which will say that we want to complete before the end of this year, making permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty, and this House has passed legislation to make permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty; and I would note that the Senate has not taken up permanency when it comes to eliminating the marriage tax penalty legislation that the House passed months ago. I think it is important that we make this a bipartisan priority.

We have that opportunity today, because think about it, for Jose and Magdalena Castillo of Joliet, Illinois, two hardworking people who have suffered the marriage tax penalty, just like 42 million American working couples, unless we make permanent the elimination of the marriage tax penalty, they are going to once again suffer higher taxes just because they are married.

We have a simple vote before us. We are voting on a rule. It is a procedural thing that we have to do, but this rule will allow us to debate the need to finish our job on eliminating the marriage tax penalty permanently; and, again, I would note that this House passed, and the votes of every House Republican and about 60 Democrats joined with us in a bipartisan effort, to eliminate the marriage tax penalty. I urge a "yes" vote on the rule and a "yes" vote on the previous question.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. NEAL).

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) for yielding me the time.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are considering more resolutions without meaning. What was great about the Seinfeld show, a show about nothing, is not so funny here in Congress when we debate bills about nothing. These empty resolutions seek to divert attention of the American voters from the Republican leadership's mediocre attempt at pension and corporate reforms.

What we should be debating today is actual legislation that deals with the important issues of pension reform and corporate accountability. My colleagues may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the first economic stimulus bill that the leadership pushed through this House, and my friend from Ohio made reference to Ma and Pa businesses they want to help, would have given $254 million with repeal of the corporate alternative minimum tax to Ma and Pa Enron.

Well, in the wake of Enron's spectacular demise, this House has done little to help those who were financially devastated as shareholders and workers. Pension security deserves serious debate. Establishing parity between corporate executives and rank-and-file employees regarding the buying and selling of stock is simply the right thing to do. It is imperative to strengthening the integrity and public trust in corporate America. Congress has that opportunity if we would just get to it.

President Bush, a former corporate executive himself, said, "If it is okay for the captain, it ought to be okay for the sailor." Instead of debating senseless senses of the House, we should correct this system that unfortunately allowed hardworking Americans, the backbone of corporate America, to lose their retirement savings.

What we are continuing to allow by wasting our time on these resolutions is abusive corporate perks. Let us start with our friends at GE, the quintessential corporate manager who was receiving exorbitant perks at shareholders' expense and most importantly, without shareholder approval. I call Members' attention to the enviable list of perks ranging from big-ticket items to minutia, from a $15 million Manhattan apartment, to corporate jets, to membership fees at four country clubs, to sports tickets, and even expensive toiletries. It is interesting why a man whose wealth has been estimated at $900 million would feel it necessary to have the shareholders of GE pay for his laundry service.

How about the ousted CEO of Tyco, formerly of New Hampshire and now of Bermuda. Without shareholder approval, the company paid for a bizarre set of perks, including $2 million on a birthday party for his wife, $15,000 for a dog umbrella stand, and how about $445 for a pin cushion.

The CEO of Adelphia, he used company funds to construct a $13 million golf course on family property. The holidays must have been very good there.

These extravagances reflect a corporate culture gone awry. Warren Buffet summed it up best when he said, "The ratcheting up of compensation has become obscene." But rather than taking up legislation to prevent or discourage such financial abuse of shareholders and investors, we debate resolutions about nothing.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) in urging this House to take up his legislation which would bring some sanity into the corporate compensation process. We need better protections for our investors, shareholders and workers. How can anybody look at those shareholders and employees at Enron and justify what happened to them?

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS).

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. FROST) said this is a meaningless resolution. I beg to differ with the gentleman; I think this resolution is very meaningful because it shows that the majority in the face of real economic stress and pain in our country is more interested in positioning for the election that is coming in 6 weeks than it is in solving the country's problems.

Since the beginning of 2001, 2 million people have gone on the unemployment rolls. In the last 12 months, 1 million people have exhausted their economic unemployment benefits, have seen them run out. Since the beginning of 2001, the stock markets have seen $4.5 trillion of wealth evaporate, much of that wealth in the pension funds of American workers, American retirees.

We have seen the equity markets themselves lose 40 percent of their value. We have seen the spread between short- and long-term interest rates, a key indicator of future happenings in our economy, grow wider than it has in recent history. We have seen a Federal Government that was bringing in $108 for every $100 that we spent at the beginning of 2001, now bringing in $90 for every $100 that we spend, and covering the difference by borrowing from the Social Security trust fund, running the government on Social Security money that should be there for the future.

The right thing to do would be to renegotiate the country's budget, to bring to this floor legislation that would really make a difference to the people that have been stressed, an extension of unemployment benefits for people who cannot find work, a means of creating more jobs in the short run for people who cannot find work, provisions that would truly strengthen pension plans, and one of those provisions can be brought to the floor if Members vote "no" on the previous question, and that is the idea of the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI), which says that a self-regulating concept in pension plans will be that whatever the top guy in the organization gets, everybody else has to get, too. If there is a restriction on what can be done with stock that applies to the person who cleans the office at night, then it applies to the person who owns the office building. If there are benefits for the person high up in the executive suite, a similar kind of a benefit has to apply to every single man and woman who stands under that person on the company's organizational table.

This is a real change that would make a real difference at a time of real problems. I regret that what we are going to do if the majority passes this rule is pass a couple of ceremonial resolutions to take note of what we wish the other body would do. We cannot control what the other body does. It has a conscience and a rhythm all of its own. That is what the framers intended. However, we ought to do something rather than nothing.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the chairman of the Committee on Education and the Workforce.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, over the course of this past year, we have watched employees of Enron and WorldCom and other companies watch their retirement savings dwindle to almost nothing. The House in a bipartisan way came together on April 11, 160 days ago, to pass the Pension Protection Act which will in fact help protect all pensions in America. Yet the Senate has not acted.

Now the Senate did in fact act along with the House when we passed the Corporate Accountability bill to put those corporate insiders who have abused their shareholders and abused the law and put them in jail. In that bill, I might add, there were two provisions from the Pension Security Act actually signed into law. One, a provision that would bar company insiders from selling their stock during a blackout period where the plan administrator is changing.

Secondly, in the Corporate Accountability bill, we do require that pension plan administrators notify their employees 30 days in advance of any blackout period. But we all know there is a lot more that needs to be done. We need to give workers more freedom to diversify their 401(k) accounts. We need to make sure that workers have access to high-quality investment advice. But the House cannot do it alone.

We all know under the Constitution that before a bill can become law and go to the President's desk, it has to be acted on by the House; it has to be acted on by the other body. Any differences have to be resolved before the bill goes to the President. The House has acted. The Senate has yet to take up pension legislation, and I believe this issue is one thing that needs to be done.

We have to remember that this bill, the Pension Security Act, passed the House with 46 Democrat members voting for it. We worked in a bipartisan way to make responsible reforms that really would in fact protect the pension assets of many of our employees. But we cannot get this bill to the President's desk until we have action. That action needs to occur, and it needs to occur now.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, when people who are watching this on television, maybe listening to us on the radio, perhaps following these proceedings in the newspaper tomorrow, when members of the public get their quarterly 401(k) statements next week and the statements from their mutual funds, think of the Republicans when you open that up. Think of the Republicans and what they have not done and what they are not willing to do to improve the economy.

They are not willing to bring any legislation to the floor today that makes any difference. They bring meaningless resolutions. I urge members of the public, think of my friends on the Republican side when you open your quarterly 401(k) statement next week.

Mr. Speaker, the majority should be ashamed to bring these sense of Congress resolutions to the floor. These resolutions are pieces of paper that do nothing, help no one, and waste the time of the House of Representatives. No wonder the American people are cynical about their government. Mr. Speaker, I would be, too, if this is the best the majority can produce.

If there is any Member on the majority side who wishes to pass some actual legislation, they should join us in defeating the previous question of the rule. If that occurs, then I will offer an amendment that provides immediately after the House passes this meaningless rule, it will take up a bill that contains real corporate welfare reforms. While the Republican majority is busy indulging their aversion to passing actual legislation so close to an election, Democrats want to crack down on corporate executives who get cheap leases for their corporate jets while their company's 401(k) plan collapses. The majority allows these executives to shield their earnings and retire to their penthouses and benefits for life, while the American people are left playing for this largess.

This is wrong, Mr. Speaker. Democrats know it and are willing to do something about it, while the Republicans pretend these problems do not exist. I do not know about anybody on the other side, Mr. Speaker, but Democrats want to work. We are elected to help make things better for the American people, not to stall legislation we were afraid would hurt us with our big donors too close to an election time.

By defeating the previous question, the House can take up this bill and stop the two classes of people we now have in this country: executives who walk away with millions and live the life of luxury, and the rank-and-file worker who goes home every day hoping their 401(k) plan will last until retirement.

Mr. Speaker, Members, all a "yes" vote does is waste time, and Congress has done enough of that for the past 3 weeks. Let us actually pass something that matters. Let us get some work done. I urge a "no" vote on the previous question.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed in the RECORD immediately before the vote on the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMPSON). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. FROST. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SESSIONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we promised at the beginning of this debate on the rule that it would be contentious, that we understood that the Democrat Party opposed what we were doing, and we understood what we were supporting. We believe what we are talking about here is good for investors. We believe it is good for people to have 401(k)s, pension plans, the opportunity to save more money.

We have had a chance to debate these important issues. We have had any number of speakers on both sides of the aisle who have talked about the things that are good and bad about these resolutions that we are talking about; but the bottom line is that Members will get a chance to vote now after hearing this debate.

Mr. Speaker, I think the previous question will pass, that we will pass these resolutions, that the vast majority of Members will understand what we are doing, the importance to the American people, and the importance to people who are trying to make a go of it with their own savings account.

I think the American public understands what we are doing, and I think they understand what the Republican Party stands for.

Previous Question for H. Res. 547—Rule on H. Res. 540 Sense of the House that the Congress should complete action on H. Res. 3762, the Pension Security Act of 2002, H. Res. 543 Sense of the House that Congress should complete action on H.R. 4019, making marriage tax relief permanent and H. Res. 544 Sense of the House of Representatives on permanency of pension reform provisions

SEC. . Notwithstanding any other provision in this resolution, immediately after disposition of the resolution H. Res. 540, the Speaker shall declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H.R. 5432) to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 with respect to the amount included in gross income by reason of personal use of corporate property, to require the same holding period for company stock acquired upon exercise of options as is applicable to company stock in its 401(k) plan, to require disclosure to shareholders of the amount of corporate perks provided to retired executives, and to provide parity for secured retirement benefits between the rank and file and executives. The first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against consideration of the bill are waived. General debate shall be confined to the bill and shall not exceed one hour equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means. After general debate the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. The bill shall be considered as read. At the conclusion of consideration of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

SEC. . If the Committee of the Whole rises and reports that it has come to no resolution on the bill, then on the next legislative day the House shall, immediately after the third daily order of business under clause 1 of rule XIV, resolve into the Committee of the Whole for further consideration of that bill.

H.R.—

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SPECIAL RULES FOR EXECUTIVE PERKS AND RETIREMENT BENEFITS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1986 (relating to pension, profit-sharing, stock bonus plans, etc.) is amended by adding at the end the following new subpart:

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a corporate insider with respect to a corporation, the tax imposed by this chapter on a corporate insider for any taxable year shall be increased by 50 percent of the amount realized by such insider from the disqualified disposition during such year of stock acquired by the corporate insider upon the exercise of a stock option granted by the corporation with respect to which such individual is a corporate insider.

"(b) DISQUALIFIED DISPOSITION OF STOCK.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the term 'disqualified disposition of stock' means any sale, exchange, or other disposition of stock which, if such stock were employer securities held in a qualified cash or deferred arrangement (as defined in section 401(k)(2)), would violate any restriction imposed on the sale or other disposition of such securities by the plan of which such arrangement is a part.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR 2 OR MORE CASH OR DEFERRED ARRANGEMENTS.—If a corporation has more than 1 qualified cash or deferred arrangement (as so defined), the restrictions which apply for purposes of paragraph (1) shall be the most restrictive provisions relating to the disposition of employer securities held pursuant to any such arrangements.

"(a) IN GENERAL.—In the case of a publicly traded corporation, the tax imposed by this chapter for the taxable year shall be increased by 50 percent of the net cost to the corporation for the taxable year of personal perks provided to a retired executive of the corporation.

"(b) WAIVER IF PERKS PROVIDED PURSUANT TO SHAREHOLDER APPROVAL.—Subsection (a) shall not apply with respect to any personal perks provided pursuant to a contract if—

"(1) all of the material terms of such contract (including a description of the benefits to be provided to the executive and the extent of such benefits) are disclosed to shareholders, and

"(2) such contract is approved by a majority of the vote in a separate shareholder vote before any benefits are provided under the contract.

"(c) NET COST OF PERSONAL PERKS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—For purposes of subsection (a), the net cost of personal perks provided to a retired executive is the excess of—

"(A) the cost to the corporation of such perks, over

"(2) PERSONAL PERKS.—For purposes of paragraph (1), the term 'personal perks' means—

"(B) travel expenses, including meals and lodging, unless such expenses are directly related to the performance of services by the executive for the corporation and the business relationship of such expenses is substantiated under the requirements of section 274,

"(C) tickets to sporting or other entertainment events,

"(D) amounts paid or incurred for membership in any club organized for business, pleasure, recreation, or other social purpose, and

"(E) other personal services, including services related to maintenance or protection of any personal residence of the executive.

"(3) COST RELATING TO USE OF CORPORATE-OWNED PROPERTY.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The cost taken into account with respect to the use of corporate-owned property shall be the allocable portion of the total cost of operating such property.

"(B) ALLOCABLE PORTION.—For purposes of subparagraph (A), the allocable portion of total cost is—

"(i) the portion of the total cost (including depreciation) incurred by the corporation for operating and maintaining such property during the corporation's taxable year in which such use occurred,

"(ii) which is allocable to the use (determined on the basis of the relationship of such use to the total use of the property during the taxable year).

"(a) IN GENERAL.—If an employer maintains a funded deferred compensation plan—

"(1) compensation of any corporate insider which is deferred under such funded deferred compensation plan shall be included in the gross income of the corporate insider or beneficiary for the 1st taxable year in which there is no substantial risk of forfeiture of the rights to such compensation, and

"(2) the tax treatment of any amount made available under the plan to a corporate insider or beneficiary shall be determined under section 72 (relating to annuities, etc.).

"(b) FUNDED DEFERRED COMPENSATION PLAN.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—The term 'funded deferred compensation plan' means any plan providing for the deferral of compensation unless—

"(A) the employee's rights to the compensation deferred under the plan are no greater than the rights of a general creditor of the employer, and

"(B) all amounts set aside (directly or indirectly) for purposes of paying the deferred compensation, and all income attributable to such amounts, remain (until made available to the participant or other beneficiary) solely the property of the employer (without being restricted to the provision of benefits under the plan), and

"(C) the amounts referred to in subparagraph (B) are available to satisfy the claims of the employer's general creditors at all times (not merely after bankruptcy or insolvency).

Such term shall not include a qualified employer plan.

"(2) SPECIAL RULES.—

"(A) EMPLOYEE'S RIGHTS.—A plan shall be treated as failing to meet the requirements of paragraph (1)(A) unless—

"(i) the compensation deferred under the plan is payable only upon separation from service, death, disability, or at a specified time (or pursuant to a fixed schedule), and

"(ii) the plan does not permit the acceleration of the time such deferred compensation is payable by reason of any event.

If the employer and employee agree to a modification of the plan that accelerates the time for payment of any deferred compensation, then all compensation previously deferred under the plan shall be includible in gross income for the taxable year during which such modification takes effect and the taxpayer shall pay interest at the underpayment rate on the underpayments that would have occurred had the deferred compensation been includible in gross income on the earliest date that there is no substantial risk of forfeiture of the rights to such compensation.

"(B) CREDITOR'S RIGHTS.—A plan shall be treated as failing to meet the requirements of paragraph (1)(B) with respect to amounts set aside in a trust unless—

"(i) the employee has no beneficial interest in the trust,

"(ii) assets in the trust are available to satisfy claims of general creditors at all times (not merely after bankruptcy or insolvency), and

"(iii) there is no factor that would make it more difficult for general creditors to reach the assets in the trust than it would be if the trust assets were held directly by the employer in the United States.

Except as provided in regulations prescribed by the Secretary, such a factor shall include the location of the trust outside the United States.

"(c) OTHER DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED EMPLOYER PLAN.—The term 'qualified employer plan' means—

"(A) any plan, contract, pension, account, or trust described in subparagraph (A) or (B) of section 219(g)(5), and

"(2) PLAN INCLUDES ARRANGEMENTS, ETC.—The term 'plan' includes any agreement or arrangement.

"(3) SUBSTANTIAL RISK OF FORFEITURE.—The rights of a person to compensation are subject to a substantial risk of forfeiture if such person's rights to such compensation are conditioned upon the future performance of substantial services by any individual.

"(4) TREATMENT OF EARNINGS.—Except for purposes of subsection (a)(1) and the last sentence of (b)(2)(A), references to deferred compensation shall be treated as including references to income attributable to such compensation or such income.

"SEC. 420D. DEFINITIONS AND SPECIAL RULE.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subpart—

"(1) CORPORATE INSIDER.—The term 'corporate insider' means, with respect to a corporation, any individual—

"(A) who is subject to the requirements of section 16(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934 with respect to such corporation, or

"(B) who would be subject to such requirements if such corporation were an issuer of equity securities referred to in such section.

"(2) RETIRED EXECUTIVE.—The term 'retired executive' means any corporate insider who is no longer performing services on a substantially full time basis in the capacity that resulted in being subject to the requirements of section 16(a) of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934.

“(b) ADDITIONS TO TAX NOT TREATED AS TAX FOR CERTAIN PURPOSES.—The tax imposed by sections 420A and 420B shall not be treated as a tax imposed by this chapter for purposes of determining—

“(1) the amount of any credit allowable under this chapter, or

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of subparts for part I of subchapter D of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by adding at the end the following new item:

Messrs. BRADY of Pennsylvania, WU, and BAIRD changed their vote from “yea” to “nay.”

The resolution was agreed to.

SENSE OF HOUSE THAT CONGRESS SHOULD COMPLETE ACTION ON H.R. 3762, PENSION SECURITY ACT OF 2002

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 547, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 540) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should complete action on H.R. 3762, the Pension Security Act of 2002, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

H. RES. 540

Workers with stronger pension protections and greater access to professional investment advice;

Whereas a bipartisan majority of the House of Representatives passed H.R. 3762, the Pension Security Act of 2002, on April 11, 2002, by a vote of 255 to 163;

Whereas the Pension Security Act of 2002 would provide working Americans with more investment education and information regarding their retirement plans, greater access to professional investment advice, rights to diversified pension plan assets, protections against corporate abuses and mismanagement of pensions, and other reforms that would increase pension coverage;

Whereas the pension protections and reforms contained in the Pension Security Act of 2002 would enhance the retirement security of American workers; and

Whereas the Senate has not passed the Pension Security Act of 2002 or equivalent legislation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the Congress should complete action in the 107th Congress on the Pension Security Act of 2002 and present such legislation to the President for his signature prior to adjournment so that needed pension protections and reforms may be delivered to the American people.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 547, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER), the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN), and the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) each will control 15 minutes.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on House Resolution 540.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, over the last year, thousands of hardworking and loyal Enron and WorldCom employees watched helplessly as their companies and their retirement portfolios collapsed. We have an obligation to provide workers with the tools to help them manage their retirement savings. Let us just put the facts on the table: the House has acted on bipartisan pension protections, but the Senate has not.

Back in February, President Bush called on Congress to act in a bipartisan fashion to restore confidence in our Nation's pension and retirement security system. More than 160 days ago, the House did its part by passing a comprehensive pension protection bill that protects workers from losing their retirement savings in Enron-style corporate meltdowns. Today we wait.

One thing is very clear: worker retirement savings remain vulnerable to corporate meltdowns today, and it should not take another Enron or WorldCom for Congress to act on bipartisan pension protection that would give workers the tools they need to protect and expand their retirement savings.

That is exactly why we passed the Bipartisan Pension Security Act in April, more than 160 days ago. It takes a balanced approach by expanding worker access to investment advice and includes new safeguards to help workers preserve and enhance their retirement security, such as giving employees new freedoms to diversify their portfolios. However, it also insists on greater accountability from senior company insiders.

There are several pension provisions that the Senate has not acted on. Enron barred workers from selling company stock until age 50; the Pension Security Act gives workers new freedom to sell their company stock within 3 years. In addition, it requires companies to give workers quarterly benefit statements that include information about accounts, including the value of their assets, their right to diversify, and the importance of maintaining a diverse portfolio. The benefits of diversification will help workers better plan and save for their future over the long term.

The bill also empowers workers to hold company insiders accountable for abuses by clarifying that companies are responsible for workers' savings during blackout periods when workers cannot make changes to their 401(k)s. Under the Pension Security Act, as under current law, workers can sue company pension officials if they violate their fiduciary duty to act solely in the interests of 401(k) participants.

As we all know, defined contribution 401(k)-type accounts have become a primary vehicle for retirement savings. Yet, today, the vast majority of American workers receive no investment advice on how best to structure their 401(k) retirement plans; and most cannot afford to pay for it on their own like company insiders can. It is time to fix these outdated Federal rules that discourage employers from giving workers access to professional investment advice.

Like most U.S. companies, Enron and WorldCom did not provide their workers with access to this type of investment advice. The investment guidance would have alerted these workers to the need to diversify their accounts, which would have enabled many to preserve their retirement savings. The Pension Security Act changes these outdated rules and encourages employers to provide their workers with access to this high-quality investment advice.

We need to give investors more choices and more information to choose wisely, so they are better able to navigate their way through volatile markets and maximize the potential of their hard-earned and hard-saved retirement savings. Workers must also be fully protected and fully prepared with the tools they need to protect and enhance their retirement savings.

The Committee on Education and the Workforce, along with my colleagues from the Committee on Ways and Means, have been engaged on the issue of pension reform for several years now, looking at ways to expand worker access to high-quality investment advice and encourage employers to sponsor retirement plans for their workers.

As our committees have been doing hearings to specifically address the Enron collapse, we did so with a firm commitment to identify further reforms that promote security, education, and freedom for employees who saved all their lives for a secure retirement. Congress should move decisively to restore worker confidence in the Nation's retirement security and pension system, and the bill before us will accomplish those goals.

Unfortunately, instead of gathering the President's signature, the Pension Security Act has been gathering dust. The Senate has not acted on any pension protection bill. If we are truly concerned about protecting the pensions of American workers, the 107th Congress will complete action on this vital issue and send President Bush a bipartisan pension security bill that he can sign into law.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SÁNCHEZ), a member of the committee.

Ms. SANCHEZ. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER), who just spoke on the other side of the aisle, realizes that the constituents in his State have lost $8.27 billion of their hard-earned nest egg due to a poor economy, corporate scandal, and weak pension laws. That is why we need to do something about these pension laws.

By now, all Americans have been affected in some way by the fallout from the collapse of large corporations like Enron, WorldCom, and Tyco. Executives have escaped troubled companies with millions of dollars in compensation, while American workers have lost over $175 billion in their 401(k) plans. Workers in my own State of California alone have lost more than $18 billion in their 401(k) savings plans.

As a legislative body, we have begun to examine ways to protect American families from future loss through the Pension Security Act, but among the many issues in this bill that we do not address is the lack of employee representation on pension boards. In its current form, pension boards have the potential to continue the cronyism that got us into the dilemma that we are in now.

In the case of Enron, many of the pension board trustees were high-ranking executives whose corporate marching orders did not represent the best interests of the workers they were appointed to protect. The Rangel-Miller substitute to the Pension Security Act would have given employees a voice at the table, where decisions about their companies' pension plans and offerings are made.

Employee representation on pension boards has already been successful, even in my own State of California, where we have the California Public Employee Retirement System, or PERS. We require six of the 13 members of that board to be elected by active and retired workers of that system.

Giving workers a real voice and real choice means ensuring active participation and overall plan management. Workers bear the financial risk in 401(k)s. They deserve to get pension people on the board representing them.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING), the author of the resolution before us.

Mr. PICKERING. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) for his leadership on pension reform and thank both him and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) for all they have done. I am pleased to sponsor the resolution before us today expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that Congress should complete action on H.R. 3762, the Pension Security Act of 2002.

Mr. Speaker, due to gross irresponsibility, corruption, and financial mismanagement, several of our country's most noted corporations have collapsed. Accordingly, tens of thousands of employees who held their retirement accounts in these companies have lost everything. Plans made for retirement vanished, hopes and dreams for the future disappeared, and savings to send children to college are gone, all because of improper and fraudulent actions of a handful of corporate executives who took advantage of this system.

We know all too well in my home State of Mississippi the cost and the consequence and the hurt and the pain and the loss when this happens. The leadership of this House, Republicans and Democrats on a bipartisan basis, took action to prevent further such abuses. We passed the Pension Security Act in April to protect the pensions of American workers from corporate wrongdoing while restoring worker confidence in our country's pension system.

However, the Senate has not passed pension security reform. Will we allow yet another corporate scandal to hurt even more families before we get a bill to the President's desk?

National security is critical today. Economic security is vital today. Retirement security should be a top priority and must be passed before we leave this session. It is crucial legislation that will reform our country's outdated pension laws. It prevents corporate insiders from selling their own stock during blackouts, and it gives workers freedom to diversify their portfolios.

Mr. Speaker, the House has done its duty. We passed this much-needed reform 5 months ago. While the President waits, the opportunity to sign this bill sits motionless, collecting dust. The time to act is now.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. SOLIS).

Ms. SOLIS. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentleman who just spoke realizes that his own constituents in his State lost $1.48 billion of his constituents' hard-earned dollars there. So I just want to remind him also of the scandal that has taken place here today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise here today because the rank and file workers, many of whom that I represent and many that Members here represent know and expect Congress to do something about this corruption that has been going on now for some time and not continue with this whole issue of safeguarding the lives of individuals that make seven-figure pensions, get special perks, and will get more protections under this Republican-sponsored piece of legislation.

As my colleagues know, this country lost over $175 billion in retirement savings, and in California alone we lost 18 billion. I would like to remind people that in our own districts right now we are faced with some very hard issues. Our economy is hurting. Nationally Hispanics right now have one of the highest rates of unemployment, 7.5 nationally, and in my own district in California in cities that I represent it is way above 11 percent and it has been there for 6 months or more.

How do I explain when I go home to my constituents that we are ignoring the jobs about putting bad CEOs behind bars and letting them go scot free? We cannot allow this version, the Republican-sponsored legislation, to get out because people are watching. Americans want to know that there is justice for all.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia (Mr. ISAKSON), a member of the committee.

Mr. ISAKSON. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me this time, and I thank the chairman for the hearing he called immediately following the revelations about Enron, a meeting that so far everybody that has spoken was in attendance, a meeting that a gentleman spoke at who was an employee of Enron. The real scandal is not a bunch of statistics where somebody tries to divert attention. The scandal is that on that day that committee where everybody that has spoken so far attended heard a man, an employee at Enron, who had $751,000 in his 401(k) in January and had nothing by the time we had that hearing. And at the same hearing the administrator and a trustee of that plan who testified admitted that her plan had gone down by only 10 percent and the difference was she had information and she could diversify. And when that gentleman, an employee of Enron, was asked about the information he received from his executives, he said the only thing they were sent was the value of the increase of Enron stock.

We can talk about all the scandals we want to, but the biggest scandal of all would be a failure of this Congress, in a year of trepidation and economic tragedy, to not see to it that the rank and file Americans we represent have a right to good information, the right to hold the administrators accountable, and the right to diversify their accounts. So rather than point to obscure statistics about what may have happened in a State and trying to attribute it to an individual who speaks, let us speak unitedly as we did in bipartisan effort just months ago and let us pass a bill that brings about the kind of reform to put to an end the kind of tragedies that took place at Enron just a short time ago. Do not divert the debate. Help the American worker and the citizens we represent.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. TIERNEY), a member of the committee.

Mr. TIERNEY. Mr. Speaker, I suppose that the gentleman who just spoke up understands that the constituents in his State have lost about $5.25 billion of their hard-earned nest egg due to a poor economy, corporate scandal, and weak pension laws, and in fact, what is amazing is all of the things that he talked about at that hearing were true. That was what the hearing told us. Nothing in the bill that passed this House would address any of those issues. That poor employee still would never have gotten information from the employer, from the CEOs and the other high corporate officers saying that they had bailed out on their stock and left the employees holding the bag. The bill that passed the House does not resolve that. Nothing puts those people on the board of directors so that they can be aware of situations like that and help them.

The fact of the matter is once again we are here in this House talking about a sense of the House, which makes no sense because it does not do anything. We are instructing the other body on how to do its business instead of doing our business. Do we want to help people in this country? What they need is an extension of their unemployment benefits. They are out. But we are not talking that action. We are talking about a sense of the House resolution.

Let us talk about people who do not have health insurance. There are almost 40 million of them now. We are not doing anything on that. Let us talk about education. We have a "no child left behind" bill that the President ran around the country touting, but he is afraid to have the majority bring it up in the House because we are $7 billion short on it. And that is money to help people get their children an opportunity in the future.

We could be talking about job training for people that need to get back into work, except the budget put forward by the majority and the administration, cuts those funds way back so that people that are displaced cannot have the resources they need to move forward.

The fact of the matter is this economy continues to struggle. Families across America watch helplessly while their retirement savings dwindle because of corporate greed. We watch their health care costs rise. Small businesses cannot meet those, and yet there is no help going out in that direction because we are not dealing with any business of import to American families in the House. We are dealing with senses of the House, senses of Congress, telling the other body of the Congress what it should be doing.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, there is much we could be doing, much that we should be doing. I say let us get down to business and let us do it.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Illinois (Mrs. BIGGERT), a member of committee.

Mrs. BIGGERT. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Resolution 540. Throughout the Nation employers pay good money to provide an excellent benefit to their employees' 401(k) plans run by professionals, and yet our 27-year-old law effectively silences those professionals, denying employees a major part of the benefit their employers want them to have. Now more than ever the 42 million Americans investing their retirement income in 401(k) plans need access to critical investment advice that will help them achieve their financial goals.

Retirement security and investment advice legislation has passed by a bipartisan vote in the House, not once but twice during this Congress. What I like best about this bill that we have passed is it gives workers more freedom to diversify their retirement savings. American workers need relief and they deserve it now. Let us get our pension reform legislation to the President's desk before Congress adjourns this year.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. WOOLSEY), a member of the subcommittee.

Ms. WOOLSEY. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the gentlewoman who just spoke realizes that constituents in her State have lost $8.66 billion, the fourth highest amount in the Nation, of their hard earned nest egg due to a poor economy, corporate scandal and weak pension laws.

Here we are after that, it is the last full week in September and the House has passed only five of 13 appropriations bills, and yet we are taking precious time to debate a meaningless resolution urging the Senate to pass a pension reform bill.

Do I want the Senate to pass pension reform? I sure do. But rather than wasting our time worrying about the Senate, I call on the majority party to pass a real pension reform bill here in our House because we have not done that yet.

Unlike the House passed pension bill, a real pension reform bill will make pension fairness its number one highest priority. The House passed pension bill not only fails to correct the pension inequities in current law which favors corporate executives over employees, it actually makes them worse. The House passed bill continues to allow executives to sell the stock that they receive in stock options at any time they choose, while it blocks their employees from selling company provided stock for 5 years.

The House passed pension bill will continue to allow executives to dump their own company stock without notifying their employees. In fact, under the House passed bill executives can actually encourage employees to continue to buy company stock just as they did at Enron, where thousands of employees lost significant amounts of their pensions. And an even bigger step backwards is that the House passed bill gives an unfair share of benefits to top executives, resulting in fewer pensions for lower wage workers.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), the majority whip.

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I could say that all the issues that the gentlewoman was talking about could be taken care of in conference committee if we could get a bill from the Senate and go to conference and work some of these out. The reason that we are here today is very important. We do not have a conference committee, and we do not have a bill that we can work on and work these problems out.

Members will vote today to reaffirm the House's commitment to protect workers' pensions and their 401(k) plans. Employees who watch renegade corporate officers raid their pensions want President Bush to be able to sign a piece of legislation to protect their retirement funds from future attacks.

Now, back in March the President told Congress to send him some common sense reforms and on April 11 this House answered his call. This House passed the bipartisan Pension Security Act. These powerful protections attracted support from 46 Democrats. They joined the Republican House majority because our pension protections were needed and they are necessary. Members of both parties came together because workers 401(k)s and pensions were in jeopardy and that had to change. Specifically, the House pension protection package gives clear new diversification rights to employees.

Now they are vested in only 3 years. Now they can diversify out of company stock. Now they have multiple investment options that are provided to the employees, and now they have more than their employer stock. We strengthened notice rights so that employees will not get caught off guard. We have placed strong restrictions on CEOs. We blocked other executives from trading company stock when the employees cannot trade their stock.

Mr. Speaker, the House passed a strong balanced pension security plan months ago, but those potent new protections are not helping the American people yet. The President is still waiting for the Pension Securities Act to reach his desk. He says he will sign it as soon as it comes. He has been waiting since April. Millions of worried Americans are waiting for action on their retirement security. They should not wait another week. There is no reason in the world to postpone action on pension reform. Workers have watched for half the year as their 401(k)s and their pensions have been battered about by politics, and despite the clear need for pension reform, the President continues to wait, unable to sign the bill that the House passed in a big bipartisan way.

So I just encourage our Members to support this resolution. Send a very strong message to the American people. Let us demands action on pension security. The Federal Government should put politics aside and vote to protect workers 401(k)s and protect workers' pensions.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. ANDREWS), a member of the committee.

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me time.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the distinguished majority whip knows that the people of Texas have lost $11.47 billion in their pension assets since these scandals began, and I am pleased to hear him say that a conference would be necessary to fix the problems in the bill that passed the House in April.

He is right. There are a lot of problems, and one of those problems is best understood if we thought about what would happen if the majority's bill that had passed through this House were the law at the time the Enron scandal came along.

If Enron was working with a financial firm that was doing its investment banking on the one hand and giving investment advice to its pensioners in their 401(k) plan on the other hand, the majority's bill would make it legal for that financial firm to give advice to employees that would encourage them to buy Enron stock. We would have to wonder whether that advice was based upon the wisdom of buying Enron stock and filling up a pension 401(k) with it or whether it was based upon the reward that that financial firm is earning as an investment banker in the form of millions of dollars or tens of millions of dollars of fees by representing Enron.

The scandal that has roiled the market, the scandal that has caused the evaporation of $4.5 trillion of pension assets is all about conflict of interest. The flaw in the bill that the majority passed out of here 160 days ago is that it institutionalizes into the law conflict of interest.

The chairman is right when he says that American workers need sound investment advice, but he is incorrect when he says that this is the kind of advice that they need. American workers need independent, unbiased investment advice about where to put their money. The majority assures them just the opposite, which is why this motion should be defeated.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York (Mr. OWENS).

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, the Republican majority has managed to move the discussion off the table and stifle any discussions of the swindles that have taken place. However, the hurt, the pain goes on with respect to what has been endured by working families and hardworking employees of corporations that swindle them out of their pension funds. To go forward with the kind of ceremonial bill that was passed in this House perpetuates that swindle. We did not do anything significant. We did not deal with the situation that exists in terms of they have lost their money and no one has offered them ways to get it back, except I must pay tribute to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SWEENEY) and the AFL-CIO. Despite the fact that Enron's employees were not unionized, several other corporations were not unionized, they have gone to bat with them, and they have got a settlement with them in the bankruptcy courts for some Enron employees to get some of their money back.

We had an opportunity to be able to deal with correcting what the Republican majority started when they took control. They wanted to maximize deregulation from working conditions in the shops to the way corporations handle pension funds and anything else. They wanted to give the corporate bosses all the power they could give them and they did that, but in hindsight, after seeing the debacle that had taken place, we had hoped that there would be bipartisan cooperation, and small steps like guaranteeing that there be a representative of the employees on the pension committee were voted down by the committee, and the bill that left this House did not have that, very tiny steps like requiring that any executive who sold his stock would have to notify the public right away. Use electronic notifications, that is available now, that was voted down.

So we are in a ceremonial situation that should not go forward. We would like real pension reform, and I hope that we have bipartisan cooperation to get real pension reform.

Mr. GEORGE MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the remaining time.

I would urge the Members to vote no on this legislation because to vote yes on this is to reaffirm the House to do nothing. The fact of the matter is most of this legislation was written before the Enron debacle. Most of this legislation was written because it was designed for the purposes of increasing the contributions that people could make to the 401(k) plans, allowing small businesses to make contributions; to the owners, they would not have to offer pension plans at that point because there is no need for them to take care of their employees, treating executives differently than we treat employees. All of that was already in this legislation.

Yes, we had a hearing on Enron and we listened to these employees who were locked into their pension plans, could not sell their stock. This legislation would have those same people, the people who were locked into WorldCom, for whatever it is worth today, requires a 5-year phase-out period and then it is 3 years. We would like to talk about how the markets work and how fast they are and how they balance out. Those same people are stuck there today, riding this out as the market dropped to its lowest point in 6 years or in 4 years on the various indexes. They cannot sell that corporate stock because they are locked in.

The gentleman from Ohio, in his State they have lost $8 billion in their 401(k)s. In California they lost $18 billion. He is right, those are not abstract figures. That means someone is not going to retire this year who planned on retiring. Somebody is not going to retire next year. I assume my colleague had constituents come to him, like they come up to me and told me how their retirement plans are shambles, how one of the spouses is going to have to continue to work. They thought he or she would be able to retire, how they now do not have the money to put their kids through school.

Yet the Republican plan does not do anything for these people. It does not let them out of these plans. It does not let them put workers on the board. 100 percent of this money belongs to the workers. It is their money. It is in their 401(k) plan, and they will not let them sit on the pension board to discuss information about investments.

Finally, they say, well, we give them more investment advice. After all we have learned out of Merrill Lynch, after we have learned out of Citicorp, after all we learned about the huge conflicts of interest about the investment banks and investment advice and touting these stocks, all we have learned, this bill does not respond to it because it allows those very same conflicts to continue. Wells Fargo now runs an investment fund. Other companies are scouring the landscape to try to buy these mutual funds because annuities are not doing so well. Insurance businesses do not want to be in the business. I know in the financial reform bill we had Chinese firewalls. They all broke down during the nineties. Everybody was doing everybody else's business.

We owe it to the public to turn down this bill, and we have to understand the reason the bill has not moved in the Senate is because the Republicans will not accept any worker protections. Yes, they want a bill just like this bill that takes care of corporate greed, takes care of corporate criminality, does nothing for the worker. That is unacceptable to the people in this country, and it should be unacceptable to their elected representatives in the House of Representatives.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The Chair would remind all Members again, it is not appropriate to characterize the positions of the Senate.

Mr. BOEHNER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself the balance of our time.

Mr. Speaker, at the end of the day we need to send President Bush a pension protection bill he can sign into law because this is about real people and their own financial security, and the gentleman and my colleagues on the other side of the aisle who talked all during this debate about the amount of losses in pension accounts by State is exactly the reason we have this resolution on the floor today.

The House passed pension protection legislation on April 11. We are still waiting to send a bill to the President, and I would remind my colleagues that this was a bipartisan bill, and I appreciate that my colleagues may not agree with all the aspects of the bill, but 46 Democrats voted with all Republicans to move this bill to the other body. Forty-six Democrats, almost one-fourth of the Democrat party in the House, voted with all the Republicans to move this bill to the other body to try to get it to the President's desk.

At the end of the day, this is about real people. It is about their retirement security, and it is time that this Congress act and get this bill to the President's desk before we leave here before the election.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of our time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is now in order to consider the debate controlled by members of the Committee on Ways and Means. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) each will control 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN).

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I rise in strong support of the resolution before us. This is a resolution to send a strong message that it is time to help all American workers to save more for retirement and to be able to have more security in their retirement. I commend the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. PICKERING) for offering the resolution, and I am happy to support him.

Mr. Speaker, today we are talking about doing the right thing. We are talking about just following up on what this House did back in April to be able to give people a little more security in their retirement. The underlying legislation that we are encouraging the other body to act on allows people who have retirement plans to have a lot more security in a number of different ways.

First, very importantly, if they are in a 401(k) plan now and they get a corporate match, as was the case with Enron, that company can tie a person into that stock for a long period of time. At Enron it was age 50 plus having 10 years of service. Under the 401(k) rules as they currently exist, a person could be tied down until they were age 65 or indefinitely.

We say instead people, after they have vested and they vest after only 3 years thanks to this House taking action last year to decrease vesting from 5-years to 3 years, after only 3 years they can divest of that stock. That is a big difference and it does make a difference. It makes a difference to millions of workers around this country who have 401(k) plans, for 42 million people in that situation. Those who have the good fortune of getting a match from their employer, and most of them do, and those who get that in corporate stock now will have the ability, the choice to be able to get out of that stock that the workers at Enron did not have.

Second and very importantly, it provides a lot better information to those same workers so that they are going to have the kind of data they need to make a good decision, better information, including the fact that when they get into a pension plan and get given a statement saying this is what this plan is all about and they ought to diversify, because commonly accepted investment principles for retirement says people do not want all their eggs in one basket, they want to have diversification. Companies now would have to say that in plain English to employees as they get into these plans. That is good. That is an improvement.

More important to me is that on a quarterly basis now a statement is going to be given to all workers. It includes the value of their assets, again their rights to diversify so they know they have those rights, an explanation of generally accepted investment principles in plain English. This is extremely important. It is not required now.

Finally, with regard to blackout periods, there was discussion earlier about the fact that during a blackout period that executives would be able to trade where employees would not who were in a 401(k) plan, that is not true. That is changed in this legislation.

This legislation also says that with regard to a blackout period a person has got to get 30 days notice. That was picked up in the Corporate Accountability Act that actually already passed, but it came out of this legislation out of the House.

There is additional fiduciary responsibilities that is in this legislation that during a so-called blackout period; that is, when the company changes advisers or something and has a blackout period on its 401(k) plan or other retirement plan, that people cannot trade in the stock during that time period. There are additional fiduciary responsibilities that go to the employer, to the executives. That is in the legislation. These are all positive changes.

Finally, with regard to education, everybody who looks at our retirement system today agrees that we not only need to allow people to put more aside for retirement, we need to encourage people to be able to do more for themselves and their families, but we also need to give people more information and better education. This legislation says that on a pretax basis a person gets a tax break basically for going down and getting investment advice, up to $500. It is not inexpensive to get investment advice. This is very important to people. They can choose whoever they want. There is no potential conflict of interest here because they can choose an adviser who is a third party who has nothing to do with the company or its 401(k) plan.

Also, significantly, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BOEHNER) just discussed, it also provides companies the option to be able to have advisers come into the company and offer good, sound advice under a fiduciary duty, that they have to not only provide good advice and sound advice and objective advice but they have to be certified, they have to be qualified to do so, and they have to disclose any kind of potential conflict they might have with the company or its 401(k) plan.

This is, when we talk to people in the trenches, again, one of the most important, single aspects of this legislation, which is to provide workers with better education so they can make better decisions so there is a nest egg there when they retire that will take care of themselves and their families in retirement.

This is great legislation, and there is no better way to show that than the fact that it has passed the House on a strong bipartisan basis. Forty-six Democrats voted for it. It is now stuck in the other body, and the President waits for it to come to his desk which he says he will sign it. He will sign it immediately.

Today's exercise may be viewed by some as meaningless, but to us it is simply a way of sending a strong message. Workers are waiting for this relief. The Enron debacle happened about a year ago. In April the House acted, and still we see no action on the other side of the Capitol, in the other body, and therefore, we cannot help people to be able to get all those rights we talked about earlier, these important changes in retirement security.

There were a number of statements made earlier by some of my colleagues on the other side of the aisle that I just do not get. They talked about how this bill gives executives more perks. Name one. I challenge my colleagues. Name one. I do not know what they are referring to. They say it makes it worse because executives can divest or sell when there is an employee blackout. Not so, and actually, again, that is in current law now because it was part of this bill, but then it got passed as part of the Corporate Accountability Act.

I do not know what talking points the other side of the aisle is referring to. But the bottom line is that this legislation was bipartisan. It passed this House with a strong vote. It is entirely focused on retirement security, helping people to be able to have more security in their retirement accounts.

We are saying today that it is time to move this legislation from the halls of Congress and from a lot of talk to action, and to be able to actually help people in need, people who are looking at their retirement accounts decrease 20 to 30 percent, and telling those people help is on the way. This is one way to give Americans a more secure retirement. It is good legislation, and I strongly urge its passage.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to myself.

Mr. Speaker, I am astonished. It is 6:15 in the evening; West Coast time it is 3:15. We have been debating essentially this issue with the rule and now in debate; and we will go on for another couple hours on this, so we will have all of this staff time in the House of Representatives and all of us sitting in the House of Representatives.

What this resolution does is just say that the Senate should pass the Boehner-Thomas bill that was passed earlier this year. That is all it does. It is a meaningless piece of legislation. It has no effect of law. It is just gamesmanship.

I suppose the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) actually might feel a little more secure at night because this resolution will probably pass, and it will make us feel better. Like, my gosh, we earned our pay because we were on the floor debating an important issue.

Maybe the gentleman from Ohio feels a little better also because people from the State of Ohio in their 401(k)s only lost $8 billion over the last 18 months. My problem is California, these same people that have 401(k)s, have lost $18 trillion. Maybe the intensity of the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) and my intensity is a little greater than the intensity of the gentleman from Ohio because $8 billion is small time compared to what we lost in California.

But what is interesting is the way Members handle legislation is not by passing resolutions and beating our chest and making a spectacle of ourselves. We walk to the other body, 5 minutes away, and say to the Senators, this bill has not passed. How can we get this piece of legislation passed? They may raise some problems. They may say we should beef the bill up a little bit. Then we could come back and start talking. The reason nothing happens is because we keep beating our chests and pretending like we are legislating when we really are not.

Many of us who are concerned about this, in the last 18 months since President Bush took the oath of office, the stock market lost 40 percent. It went from 11,700 points down to 7,700 points. That is a lot of money. That is trillions of dollars worth of losses.

My colleagues said when the President took office, we have to reform Social Security; we are going to privatize Social Security. All of a sudden privatization has become a bad word because people have lost money in the stock market, so they abandon the discussion about Social Security; but it will probably come up next year because the President plans to privatize Social Security. That is why this election is important.

We will not debate Social Security. We have four Republican bills out there. The gentleman from Texas (Mr. ARMEY) has one, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SHAW) has one. Why not bring those bills up on the privatization of Social Security. Let us debate those so at least the American public in an election year will know where we stand.

On prescription drugs, Republicans want to privatize Medicare and the prescription drug program. That is why the other body has a very difficult time with it because we want to put prescription drugs under the Medicare program to make sure all seniors are protected.

So we have fundamental differences, but what is really sad is that the Boehner-Thomas bill is irrelevant. We have some major problems in America. People have lost their 401(k) plans. People are stuck with their own company's plans, their stock in their 401(k)s. This bill will do very little. I think the gentleman from California (Mr. GEORGE MILLER) said it is a 5-year transition before it really comes effective. Then the so-called financial advice will come from the same people that are managing the Enron-type pension plans. They are going to say buy Enron stock or WorldCom stock because it is in their company's best interests. They are getting their wages from the company. That is why it is very difficult for the other body to get excited about this.

Mr. Speaker, what we should be dealing with right now is transparency. One of the real problems in the stock market and why there is a great loss of confidence is because people know that the books are not necessarily accurate. We saw that with the former CEO of General Electric, Jack Welch. This guy has a corporate jet on call, he had a penthouse in New York, tickets to sporting events. Millions and millions of dollars' worth of money that was part of his going-away present in perpetuity for the rest of his life. He was smart enough to give it up because he knew the political ramifications.

I wish my colleagues would have the judgment of Jack Welch, and I will tell Members why, not to punish corporate CEOs, but to provide transparency. The American public when they invest in the market should know exactly where that money is going. That means less stock dividends that are being paid out. That is why this is important.

We would like to just offer a bill, or even an amendment; but under the rules, the Republicans will not allow us to do it. But if in fact there is a situation where we are going to give big fringe benefits to many of these CEOs who are retiring, all it requires is letting the shareholders of the company know what these benefits are, what the value is; and secondly, letting the stockholders vote. What is wrong with that? Why can we not debate that issue today and send it over to the other body. I bet they would pass it quickly.

But the other side of the aisle does not want to do it quickly because they have a lot of friends that they are helping. That is what the problem is right now, and that is why this resolution is a waste of time, and that is why we have already wasted 3½ hours, and we will probably waste more time on nothing today. But we will go home, and we will feel a little better and have a glass of wine and kind of enjoy life.

But I will say that my constituents, maybe not the constituents of the gentleman from Ohio, but my constituents, because they have lost $18 trillion in their 401(k) plans, are really sad.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The Chair would remind Members that characterizing why the Senate might be having difficulty is also not in order under the rules.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH).

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, pension security is close to the heart of every working American. Workers save for years with the hopes that after they retire they will be able to live without financial worries, spending more time with their family and friends.

Five months ago the House passed a pension reform bill with significant bipartisan support. This legislation gives workers the freedom to diversify their retirement savings, it expands worker access to investment advice, empowers workers to hold company insiders accountable for abuses, and gives workers added protections. The House has acted on pension reform; the Senate has not. Yet Americans continue to worry about their retirement security.

Mr. Speaker, Americans deserve a secure retirement. They expect it, and they have earned it. I also want to add that I think the majority whip a few minutes ago on the House floor, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. DELAY), made an excellent point. He reminded us that while the House has acted, the Senate has not. Under our system, unless we have a work product from the House and a work product from the Senate that can go to a conference committee, we are not going to have pension reform. As much as we might criticize what the House has done, it is too late to do anything about it. Pension reform passed with bipartisan support in the House. The only action left now is once the House has acted, under our system, the Senate now needs to act, and we need to get that work product. The House has acted; the Senate has not.

The other point, Mr. Speaker, there has been a lot of sentiment expressed tonight about the great need for pension reform and pension security. I think we all agree with that, but we need to focus not on what is wrong with the work product of one body, but we need to focus on the solution. And once again, the only way we are going to get to that solution is if we have a work product from the House and we have a work product from the Senate. Unfortunately, the House has acted; but the Senate has not. Until we get to the point where we can get to the conference committee and resolve our differences and do what is right for American workers and the American people, and for those who deserve to have a secure retirement, we are not going to get to that solution. Once again, the House has acted and the Senate has not. Until we come up with a solution to that dilemma, which is going to be a conference report after the House and the Senate have acted, we are not going to do what is right for the American people.

Mr. Speaker, once again, the House has acted; the Senate has not. We have to resolve that before we can do what is right.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time and for his leadership. I wonder if the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SMITH) realizes that his constituents in the State of Texas have lost $11.5 billion of their hard-earned nest eggs due to corporate scandal and weak pension laws.

It is very interesting to see us gathered on this floor telling the other body that it should pass legislation when we have been so delinquent in this body in doing our own business. The other body has passed a prescription drug benefit which we are trying to discharge with a discharge petition. We should be taking up that prescription drug benefit. The American people want and need it.

Not one single appropriations bill has become law even though the fiscal year is less than 1 week away, October 1. The Republican leadership has refused to schedule desperately needed bipartisan school construction legislation.

That leadership has also failed to schedule legislation to help all Americans with escalating prescription drug benefits, as I mentioned.

Now the Republican leadership has a new strategy, pass resolutions praising old, irresponsible tax bills and blame the other body. The resolution before us today is not only a press release, it is a very misleading one.

Members can see what we need to do for education in our country and how far short the Republican initiative on this comes, and that we are taking no action to meet the needs of America's children. The administration and the Republicans say Leave No Child Behind in their rhetoric, but in reality their budget request leaves millions of children behind by having a $7 billion deficit in what they are sending to this floor.

Hopefully, some of the Republicans on the other side of the aisle will prevail so we can do justice for our children. This is surreal. This is not sense of the Congress; this is nonsense of the Congress.

Mr. Speaker, our Founding Fathers placed a value on life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness. That pursuit of happiness included working hard, playing by the rules, and being able to reach their self-fulfillment and retirement with dignity, not to have to be dependent on their children to support them; indeed, helping their children reach their fulfillment.

What has happened to the pensions of America's workers is absolutely a travesty of justice and goes against the principles of our Founding Fathers who valued the pursuit of happiness.

Separate and apart from the ridiculousness of us telling the other body what to do when we have not done our own business, this bill is a bad bill and should not become law. Shareholders should be made aware of and allowed to vote on perks provided to retired executives, but not under this bill. Retired corporate executives often get large retirement benefits above and beyond their pensions and other conventional benefits. These include housing, corporate jets, living expenses, tickets to sporting events and the rest. Congress should impose penalties on corporations providing such benefits unless shareholders know and approve of such things. We should ensure that corporate executives that crash their companies cannot escape with golden or platinum parachutes. But corporate executives also get retirement benefits that they can collect even after the corporation fails. Congress should tax executives on their deferred compensation benefits like all other income if the benefits are paid to executives in the case of bankruptcy or corporate corruption.

This bill should be opposed because it endorses the Republicans' inadequate pension legislation. The GOP bill does not show what we have learned from the collapse of Enron, WorldCom and other corporate scandals. The underlying bill does little to protect employees' retirement savings. The underlying bill does not hold executives accountable. The underlying bill is not worthy of passage. Let us mind our own business, heed the needs of the American people, and pass our education bill, our prescription drug bill, and our own good pension bill.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this nonsensical sense of the Congress.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to talk a little about what is actually before us today. The gentlewoman from California talked about a lot of different issues and ended by saying that she is not supportive of the legislation because it does not include certain things. Everything she talked about including has to do with executive compensation. Taxing executives and talking about ways in which we can further keep executives from getting the kind of compensation that they are currently getting is a legitimate subject and it ought to be one that we have formal debate on, have hearings on it and bring it to the floor. But I would ask the gentlewoman how it is going to help one person have a more secure pension. It has nothing to do with what is before us. It is a great message.

I would ask the gentlewoman, I know that she is not on our committee that dealt with the prescription drug issue for months and I see the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) is here, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN) and others from the committee, but to say that we have not passed a prescription drug benefit I think is a little surreal. I remember being on this floor and spending a lot of time on that issue. I remember passing a $350 billion piece of legislation that provides real coverage for prescription drugs. We can differ on how that prescription drug coverage is offered to our seniors, but the House took it upon itself to pass legislation that provides a real prescription drug benefit.

It, too, now that the gentlewoman has raised it, if she wants to get into the other issues, we can talk about all the ways the House has acted and the Senate has not acted and the President awaits. Prescription drugs is a perfect example. The Senate has not acted on providing a prescription drug benefit. If you would consider the generic drug legislation in the Senate a prescription drug benefit, I hope you are not going home and telling your constituents that because it is not going to offer them the kind of benefit that they are looking for which is to be able to pay for prescription drugs. The average senior pays over $2,100 a year. None of that will be helped by the generic bill that passed in the Senate. The Senate was not able to pass a prescription drug benefit. They had it on the floor for a week.

Homeland security is another issue that we worked on together. We passed that issue 9 weeks ago now or something like that. The President asked us to pass it, the House got busy, we had a good select committee process, and we passed it. The Senate still can't seem to get its act together to pass legislation in that regard to be able to keep our country safer.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. LATOURETTE). The gentleman will suspend. The phrase "the Senate can't get its act together" is not appropriate under the rules.

The gentleman may continue.

Mr. PORTMAN. I apologize to the Chair. I will refrain from saying that again.

My point is if you go down the list, whether it is prescription drug coverage, whether it is the pension security bill before us today, whether it is the faith-based initiative which passed this House on a bipartisan basis, whether it is having a budget, the Senate does not even have a budget, the Senate has not been able to, I am not sure how I can characterize this, but the Senate has not been able to act and the House has. I just think it is a little surreal to stand here and say that somehow in this prescription drug issue, the House has not acted and the Senate has is not accurate and to say that somehow this pension bill is not good because it does not deal with executive compensation issues which have nothing to do with what we were trying to do at the time, which was to give people a little more security and more rights with regard to their pensions.

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Ms. PELOSI. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the gentleman yielding. I will do my best not to name the other body by its name.

First of all, let me say that perhaps it is news to the gentleman that many people in our country have very serious concerns about the cost of drugs. The Senate, the other body, passed in a very strong way, 78–21, a generic drug bill that is on that table. We want it to come to the floor so this House can act upon it to lower the cost of prescription drug to the American people.

As far as the bill that passed this House, that is a sham in my view. The Democrats were proposing a prescription drug benefit with guaranteed benefits under Medicare for America's seniors. The Republican bill is a bill that tells seniors to go into the private market and we will help you buy insurance for prescription drugs there. But that is not a real guaranteed benefit.

Mr. PORTMAN. Reclaiming my time, I think I allowed the gentlewoman to make her point, which was my point, which is that the House did act to pass on a bipartisan basis, admittedly we did not agree on all the details, but we passed a real prescription drug benefit under Medicare. The Senate has not. I do not think there is any issue more important to my constituents. I agree with the gentlewoman. I think it is very important to move forward on that. But the Senate has not acted.

That is what we are trying to do today. We are just trying to shine light on the fact that on a number of different issues, the United States Senate has not followed suit, has not passed in a constructive way legislation that we could then take into conference and then send to the President for signature which then could have a real effect on the lives of real people. There is no issue more important than prescription drug coverage, but there is also a very important issue out there which is how to keep people who want to be able to save for their retirement, to give them a little more security so that they are going to know, in the example of Enron for instance, where they could not get rid of their corporate stock, they had to hold onto it because they were restricted, that that could no longer happen. That cannot happen if this legislation passes. People can no longer be told, You have to keep that stock until you're age 50 plus 10 years of service. They can no longer be told that during a blackout period executives are able to trade shares and they cannot. They can no longer be told they are not going to give notice of blackout periods when they cannot trade stocks. They can no longer be in a situation where they are not getting the kind of information that they need through quarterly statements, which we are going to require under this legislation, what their account is, what is going on with their plan. The kind of transparency that the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) talked about is absolutely essential. That is the stuff of this legislation.

It also does provide education. I talked earlier about the gentleman from Maryland's bill and mine which lets people on a pretax basis get a tax break for going out and getting education advice wherever they want it. That is something I think this House on a bipartisan basis agrees is necessary to move to the next step in retirement security. Those are the kinds of things that are in this legislation. Those are the kinds of things that we need to have done. The Senate needs to act. The House has acted. It is time to actually help the American people and not just talk about it.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time controlled by the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

The Chair, since the next resolution will also deal with similar matters, would again remind Members that phrases like "the Senate has not passed legislation in a constructive way" is an inappropriate characterization of Senate action.

The gentleman from California has 5 minutes left.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from California (Ms. PELOSI).

Ms. PELOSI. I thank the gentleman for yielding time.

Mr. Speaker, it seems strange that we are here debating a sense of the Congress to instruct the other body how to do its business when we are not even allowed to use the name of the other body here. It seems strange that we are here talking about what they should do with their schedule when we have a schedule that begins on Tuesday night and ends on Thursday afternoon. We give new meaning to reducing the week. It used to be "Thank God it's Friday." Now it is "Thank God it's Thursday afternoon," so Congress can go home, without passing any appropriations bills, turning them into law before the end of the fiscal year, which is October 1. Not one appropriation bill is law.

Yes, I say to the gentleman, the Republicans did not pass a prescription drug bill under Medicare. The Democratic proposal was a prescription drug benefit under Medicare, guaranteed benefits for our seniors. The Republican bill is a hoax. Let us not try to fool the American people. They know what is real. Let us do an education bill so that we can fund education and afterschool programs and helping children. Let us pass our appropriations bills, let us have HMO reform, let us pass a prescription drug bill. Let us past electoral reform so we can have honest counts in our country about who should serve in office.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN).

Mr. CARDIN. I thank the gentleman from California for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I regret that this resolution is before us. It is not in the spirit of how we have worked on pension legislation in this Congress earlier. I am proud of the work that the gentleman from Ohio and I have done in a bipartisan way to bring forward pension legislation. But let me remind my friend the gentleman from Ohio that the legislation that we are considering today came to this body through the Committee on Ways and Means in a bipartisan way, but the Committee on Rules adopted an Education and Workforce version which was not in keeping with the way that we proceeded in a bipartisan manner and in fact contained provisions concerning investment advice which I think is very damaging and needs to be corrected, and I think many people believe that.

Let me also mention the other point that the gentleman from Ohio raised, and that is about corporate responsibility and having equal protection for the rank and file members versus the corporate executives. The gentleman from Ohio asked a very important question. How does that help people with their retirement benefits? Responsible corporate management is very important for the workers of a company. How much you compensate or how you try to get around the accounting rules or what you do about executive compensation speaks to the manner in which you run a company and manage a company. The employees have a vested interest in making sure that company succeeds. When it fails and we have this excessive compensation to the corporate executives, it is different than how the rank and file are treated. We should correct that. That is why I said I think we are wasting our time on this resolution and we missed an opportunity because we should have been talking about the issues that would have brought us closer together on the underlying bill and given us a better chance to get a bill to the President's desk.

I do not believe this resolution helps us achieve those objectives. I regret that we are debating this resolution rather than the important issues that we should in regards to protecting workers' rights.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana (Mr. VISCLOSKY), a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. VISCLOSKY. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I would open my remarks by stating that as a Member of this House for the last 18 years, I never remember being so tired, tired of doing nothing, tired of not passing an agricultural appropriation bill, tired of not passing a foreign assistance bill in this House, tired of not passing an energy and water bill in this House.

The gentleman from Ohio in his remarks stated before that a number of points as far as corporate compensation needing shareholder approval was not before the body. He was absolutely right, because the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) wanted to make those important questions part of the real debate today and we were prohibited by the leadership under the rule that provided consideration of this resolution from doing it. What did the gentleman from California want to do as far as making sure real American citizens who owned stock can either approve or disapprove outrageous corporate perks?

Let us talk about corporate housing that is provided to executives. In the First Congressional District, I have had thousands of steelworkers lose their jobs. They have had to sell their house. Nobody is providing them any house and voting on it. We have talked about corporate jets and no one being able to vote on that as far as shareholders are concerned. When my steelworkers come out to Washington, D.C., they take a bus. When we talk about shareholders having an opportunity to vote on reimbursement for living expenses, the people I represent have lost their job and they do not have any money to live on. The only thing I do not have a concern about is sporting events, because they have all the time in the world to go to their children's soccer games and Little League games and basketball games because they have lost their job. They have lost their job. And we were not allowed today to vote on that issue and that is wrong.

Mr. ROEMER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of strengthening retirement security in America. Congress should act now to clean up executive mismanagement and check corporate greed that is responsible for the loss over $175 billion in pension savings.

In my home state of Indiana, 55 percent of the workforce has pensions. Over the last year, their losses exceed four and a half billion dollars worth of hard-earned retirement savings. Hooisers like all Americans are shocked by reports of corporate executives who played by different rules, who deceived employees about their company's health, and who skimmed billions from corporations heading toward bankruptcy while thousands of workers witnessed their jobs and pensions evaporate.

The House of Representatives had a chance to enact meaningful reform when the Pension Reform Act, H.R. 3762, was considered last April. However, that bill fails to achieve basic protections reforms that most businesses and workers should agree on such as allowing employees to adequately control their own investments in pensions funds. Nor does it provide for investment diversification, employee representation on pension boards, or improved investment advice. For these reasons, I did not support H.R. 3762 when it was considered by the House last April.

As the pension crisis has deteriorated in recent months, CEOs and corporate executives continue to play by different rules than their employees. The law maintains giant loopholes permitting employers to deceive employees about stock sales and conceal stock options and conflicts of interest. Pension funds are supposed to belong to the employees, but they are still denied the ability to say how their funds are managed.

Although I support the intent of this resolution to stimulate further consideration of pension reform legislation. I believe that the House bill could be improved. For example, I offered amendments requiring corporations to notify their employees when stock levels in their pension reforms exceeded designated amounts. This would encourage workers to diversify their accounts in case of sudden and unexpected downturns in their company stock holdings. I also proposed an amendment requiring corporations to communicate to their workers in clear and understandable terminology with regard to pension rules. Unfortunately, the Rules Committee denied consideration of my amendments on the House floor.

Congress should act now to improve a workforce environment where retired workers now struggle to live with dignity after working for so many years while executives take home disproportionately high benefits at the expense of profits earned from employee-contributed pension plans. The current pension reform legislation fails to make corporate executives play fair or by the same set of pension standards as their workers. I therefore urge rejection of this business as usual resolution.

Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in opposition to both H. Res. 540 and H. Res. 544. We desperately need to pass meaningful pension security reform. But the plan put forward by Republicans flatly does not pass the test. These resolutions simply call for urging the Senate to comply with the Republican's ill-conceived reforms and then make them permanent.

Republicans can chastise the Senate all they want or put hard hats on corporate lobbyists to make people think they're listening to average, everyday American workers. But it won't change the simple fact that Republican pension reform just isn't enough. In fact, these resolutions are so meaningless that they can only be viewed for what they are: a temporary distraction from the real reform the Republicans have failed to deliver.

President Bush has said, that if "It's okay for the sailor, it ought to be okay for the captain." Democrats agree with the President's rhetoric and have taken it a step further in offering a bill—of which I am an original cosponsor—that truly holds corporations accountable. The Republicans simply allow corporate captains to sink their own companies and let workers and investors go down with the ship.

Corporate executives should be required to face the same rules on stock options and deferred compensation plans as apply to rank-and-file employees. The bill that the Democrats propose would provide workers the same rights to buy or sell company stock in their 401(k) plans as corporate executives have in being permitted to buy or sell company stock obtained through stock options.

President Bush claims, "It is unfair for workers to be denied the ability to sell stock when executives are free to sell stocks . . ." and again Democrats completely agree. Corporations rarely restrict their executives' capacity to buy and sell stock from stock options, but many corporations restrict their rank-and-file workers from buying and selling the corporation's stock in their 401(k) plans.

Democrats would eliminate this double standard by ensuring that CEOs adhere to the same restrictions as employees in the buying and selling of their company stock. Our bill would impose tax penalties on executives who sell stock acquired from stock options if the sale violates the restrictions rank-and-file employees face in their own 401(k) plans. Executives don't need any more perks than they already receive. But it's high time this Congress listen to the calls of the rank-and-file workers who want their pensions protected from unscrupulous corporate thieves.

The resolutions before us today are an insult to American workers. I urge my colleagues to vote no on H. Res. 540 and H. Res. 544.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. All time for debate has expired.

Pursuant to House Resolution 547, the resolution is considered read for amendment and the previous question is ordered on the resolution.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to clause 8 of rule XX, further proceedings on this question will be postponed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remark and to include extraneous material on the subject of H. Res. 540, the resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXPRESSING THE SENSE OF THE HOUSE ON PERMANENCY OF PENSION REFORM PROVISIONS

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to House Resolution 547, I call up the resolution (H. Res. 544) expressing the sense of the House of Representatives on permanency of pension reform provisions, and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 544

Whereas increasing pension coverage and pension savings is crucial to retirement security;

Whereas the Economic Growth and Tax Relief Reconciliation Act of 2001 provided significant bipartisan pension reforms that would increase pension savings and increase the number of employees covered by employer pension plans;

Whereas these pension reforms are scheduled to expire after 2010;

Whereas a bipartisan majority of the House of Representatives passed H.R. 4931, the Retirement Security Savings Act of 2002, on June 21, 2002 by a vote of 308–70 to permanently extend these important pension benefits;

Whereas failure to enact H.R. 4931 would significantly impact retirement planning and retirement security by eliminating pension reforms that exist under present law; and

Whereas the Senate has not passed the Retirement Security Savings Act of 2002 or equivalent legislation: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the Congress should complete action in the 107th Congress on the Retirement Security Savings Act of 2002 and present such legislation to the President for his signature prior to adjournment so that American workers can be assured that the pension reforms under present law will not be eliminated.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 547, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) each will control 30 minutes.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. BRADY), a valued member of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. BRADY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding me time and thank him for his leadership in this very bipartisan effort to increase and protect retirement savings.

Let me, as an aside, tell you that retirement security is very important in my district. I have many Enron workers in my district. Many of them are my neighbors who have lost their jobs, lost their whole retirement savings through no fault of their own. Listening to the debate tonight, I continue to be ashamed of those in Congress who continue to try to score political points off the misery of our Enron workers and shareholders.

We have an opportunity, both in urging the Senate to take this bill off their calendar and to help us protect retirement savings, and we have it in this resolution as well, where we are trying to protect improvements that have been made to help people save.

We simply do not save enough in America. For the life of me, I do not know why Washington insists on creating obstacles to savings, punishing people for trying to put money aside for their education or their retirement or for health care, for a rainy day. Under the bill that we passed in a very bipartisan way, we helped remove those obstacles.

Unfortunately, unless we make those incentives permanent, in 10 years we are going to make it harder again for people to save. Without the Senate taking this bill from the calendar, where it has remained for quite some time, too long, the maximum amount that you and I can contribute to our IRA each year will be cut from $5,000 to $2,000, at a time we need it the most. The most that we can contribute to our savings plans at work will be cut almost $5,000, again at a time when inflation adds up and we need those savings the most.

This catch-up provision for people, especially women, who worked at home while others set up their business or worked, who can make catch-up retirement contributions, that will be eliminated. Also the portability, which means when people move from job to job, like a backpack they can take their pension retirement with them easily, that will be erased as well.

So we have added expenses and obstacles and disincentives to savings that simply do not belong there. Congress was wise to remove it. We would be much wiser to make it permanent.

I support this resolution, and anyone who truly cares about savings ought to do the same.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, it is kind of interesting, because I do not have anybody that wants to speak. This bill is so meaningless, so irrelevant, so worthless, that not one of my colleagues on our side of the aisle wants to speak. I think the other side probably has two or three, probably because they want to say something, I do not know what. But again, this is a resolution that asks the other body to pass a bill that we passed.

Now, under the rules of the institution, of the Congress, after we pass a piece of legislation we enroll it and then we send it over to the other body so they know they can either take action or take no action. If they decide to take no action, then the next logical thing is, maybe you do not want to walk over there, maybe the 5-minute walk takes too long, how about just calling them up and saying, hey, what is wrong with the bill we sent over, because we want to move it. Then maybe you can have a discussion. But, instead, we have to pass a resolution, keep all the staff here; and no one really wants to speak about it.

I will tell you why this is so irrelevant. This is unbelievable. It is so irrelevant because this will not take effect until 2010. This will not take effect until the year 2010, 8 years from now. We are not even going to be around here. Maybe that is why we are doing it now, because we want to make sure our legacy is going to be effective in 2010. This is not going to have any effect, even if it became law, until the year 2010.

Well, let me just say this, if I may, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to get into the substance too much, but I think it does require a little discussion about the substance. In this proposal that was passed by the House, and is not being passed by the other body and will not take effect, at least the extension of this law, for 8 years, 84 months, 8 years, in this proposal we actually make significant changes in the anti-discrimination law, that is a very technical law, and also the top-heavy rules.

I have a letter dated April 11 when the bill was being considered by the House by Daniel Halperin, who just happens to be a professor of law at Harvard University, an expert on pension law; and he says if this bill is allowed to continue and take effect, at that time it had not taken effect, but it is in effect now, it could allow about 80 percent of the ordinary workers of a company that are non-highly compensated to be excluded from the plan, the pension plan. Eighty percent of the workers could be excluded from the pension plan. You just help the high-level employees.

Then I have a letter from a professor from the University of Alabama named Norman Stein, not a real liberal institution, Alabama; but he indicates that this bill was cobbled together by the pension industry.

Of course, Karen Ferguson, director of a group that makes sure that beneficiaries are adequately taken care of on pension benefits, basically said this bill is really going to do damage to the average worker in America because it is going to create a situation because of the top-heavy rules and anti-discrimination rules where pension benefits are going to be eliminated.

The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) has said, because I remember the debate he had last time, that, no, what is going on, the reason why Americans are not having more pension benefits is because these rules are too complicated and it does not do enough for the highly compensated employees. So why would a manager, an executive, set up a pension plan if he is not going to benefit?

The reason he does not set up that plan, I say to the gentleman from Ohio, is because they found a way to get around it. These high-level executives had companies like Arthur Andersen who advised them in tax laws. We know what that is really all about. So what they have done was they set up rules like Ken Lay had in which he was able, without being taxed, to have his deferred compensation placed in an offshore trust account, so that when he finally retired and when Enron went bankrupt and all the employees lost their 401(k) plans, he was able to then get millions of dollars in deferred compensation. So he found a way around dealing with pension benefits. He had a defined benefit plan, and the Enron employees had what is known as a defined contribution plan, subject to the stock market; and they lost everything.

Of course, you have all kinds of gimmicks that insurance companies use, for example the split dollar plan, and we all heard about that, because many folks were worried that was going to be eliminated. So that is another plan that highly compensated employers could engage in.

So they really do not need to set up system-wide plans in companies, because of the fact that they are being taken care of through the Tax Code or through other mechanisms that have been thought through by the Arthur Andersens and all those smart people that know how to deal with tax laws.

What we really should be doing instead of passing meaningless resolutions is really try to deal with the average American's pension benefit. There are only three ways when a person is ready to retire that they think about their retirement. One is personal savings, and we know a great majority of Americans do not have personal savings because they have family responsibilities, kids going to college. So most of the time even families that make $70,000, $80,000 a year, spend that money right away on their families, because those are just necessities. So they do not have any savings, except their house. That is the only thing they have.

Then you have 401(k)s. Because we do not have these defined benefit plans in existence anymore, it is basically 401(k) plans. You saw what happened when the market went down 40 percent the last 18 months, since the President was sworn into office. So that obviously is subject to the economy, and subject to the global economy as well.

Of course, the one thing that at least the Enron employees and the WorldCom employees told me when they came to Washington, they said, "At least I have my Social Security benefits." But we know about Social Security benefits, because the President wants to privatize Social Security. The President wants to make Social Security subject to the stock market.

Well, if the President gets his way and if we do not take action on the 401(k)s, if we do not do something about these highly compensated employers and we extend this law beyond 2010, I think we are going to do major damage to the baby boom population. We have had all kinds of studies in America now that people 45 years and older, they are not going to be ready for retirement. In fact, all they are going to have is maybe $20,000 or $30,000 in their 401(k) plans. If they live another 20 years, that is going to be gone within a couple of years. All they have is Social Security, and that may not be secure if the President is successful in privatizing Social Security.

So I have to ask myself, what are we doing here at 7 o'clock in the evening debating a bill that is meaningless and not taking up some of the real important problems of America? Well, it is because you cannot do it. My colleagues on the other side of the aisle cannot pass these other bills that are really critical to the American public. They cannot deal with the national economy. That is why we are fooling around with meaningless resolutions. That is why I have no colleagues that want to speak on this, because it is meaningless.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that perhaps the reason there are not a lot of people who want to speak in opposition is because this has been a very popular piece of legislation. It passed the House by over 400 votes. Even in the context of the tax cut, which was quite a partisan exercise, it passed with 308 votes. It is good legislation.

I would love the opportunity to address some of the concerns that the gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) raised, and I would like to do so in a moment.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER), a valued member of the Committee on Ways and Means, who was instrumental in putting together this legislation, particularly with regard to the very important provisions to help multi-employer plans. There was tremendous complexity surrounding these multi-employer plans. Section 415 needed to be reformed, something that had been talked about for years. Finally, with this legislation we got it done. I hope my colleague will address that.

Mr. WELLER. Mr. Speaker, of course I rise in support of this resolution which, frankly, is very, very important; and I commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) for the leadership he has given on this issue.

You know, if you listen to the rhetoric of my friends on the other side of the aisle, you can see they are, frankly, laying the groundwork for a tax increase. They opposed permanency of the Bush tax cut, they are opposing permanency of the individual provisions, whether marriage penalty or death tax, and even the most popular provision, which, of course, is the pension provisions that we have before us today.

They are opposing it; and, frankly, a vote against this resolution essentially is a vote in favor of a tax increase. As you can see from the rhetoric and their procedural moves that they always take, they are trying to stall, stymie and delay making permanent the Bush tax cuts, because they believe that money can be better spent here in Washington than hardworking Americans can spend it back home. I believe, as I know the majority of my colleagues do, that we should allow working Americans to keep more of what they earn.

Today we are, of course, talking about the opportunity to improve retirement savings. This House passed this with overwhelming bipartisan support. In fact, the Bush tax cut, the final version passed with overwhelming bipartisan support. Unfortunately, it was not permanent; but we passed legislation increasing opportunity for retirement savings, which benefits every American who pays taxes. We increased the opportunity to give a larger amount to your individual retirement accounts, increased that from $2,000 to $5,000. We increased what you can put into your 401(k) from $10,000 to $15,000.

I would note that there are catch-up provisions. People like my sister Pat, who are out of the workforce for a few years, staying home with the kids, the family income is less and they were not able to set aside much or anything for retirement savings. Now they can make a catch-up contribution once they turn 50, which will be a great benefit to stay-at-home moms and empty-nesters. Thanks to the Bush tax cut, that is now law. Unfortunately, it is temporary.

I would also note, as the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) pointed out, we had an important reform that benefited over 10 million construction workers, building tradesmen and women, all across this country, who benefit from the removal of the caps put in place under section 415, which affects the multi-employer pension funds, which are basically labor union and building trade pension funds. Those artificial caps have been in place for far too long. Thanks to the Bush tax cut, they have been removed. And for a couple like Larry Kohr of Peru, Illinois, and his wife, he saw his take-home pension that he can live on, now that he has retired, essentially double by removing those artificial caps. There is no science and no reason to have them; nobody had just gone back to fix them.

So that section 415 provision, which claims a lot of bipartisan support unfortunately will expire unless we make it permanent.

That is why I was pleased earlier this year that the House of Representatives passed with a vote of 407 Members, the vast majority of Democrats; only a very small, narrow group of Democrats voted against making permanent this legislation. Unfortunately, the Senate has not yet taken up this legislation. My hope is that the House and Senate can work together in a bipartisan way and make permanent efforts to eliminate that cap on section 415, as well as increase opportunities for retirement savings. So let us really get to what the real issue is here before us.

The question before us today is, do we make permanent the portion of the Bush tax cut which gives increased opportunity for retirement savings, helping construction workers, helping those who have IRAs or 401(k)s, helping empty-nesters or stay-at-home moms do what we all need to do more of, and that is to set aside more for our retirement savings. Think about this: unless we make it permanent, those opportunities go away. That is a tax increase on savings; that is a tax increase on working Americans. This is a simple vote, and that is if you vote "no," you are voting to raise taxes on all those who wish to save for their retirement.

Mr. Speaker, I urge an "aye" vote, and I commend the gentleman from Ohio for his resolution before the House.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) is the only other speaker on their side, and I am the last speaker, the only speaker on my side, and if the gentleman is, and we can have some understanding that we are going to kind of keep it light and short, I will yield back the balance of my time, with that understanding.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman. I do not know about keeping it light, but we will try to keep it short.

Mr. MATSUI. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. PORTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I guess it has been a helpful discussion. What we are doing here today is we are trying to shed light on the fact that the House-passed legislation, which made these good retirement changes permanent, which the other body chose not to do that; it had to be done on a temporary basis, only for the next 8 years.

We think it is very important for the purposes of planning, and what is more important than retirement planning? It is very important to the person who is planning to have some permanency. It is important to the individual worker. People need to plan for their retirement. It is planning for more than 8 years out. We need to know it is going to be there for the baby boom generation; we need to know that it is going to be permanent changes in law. For the employer, particularly the small employer, who is thinking about getting into the pension business for the first time; only 20 percent of those with 25 or fewer employees now offer pensions. For those people, they need to be able to plan. So not to have this be permanent is bad policy. It makes no sense at all. That is what we are doing today. We are trying to shine some light on this issue so that our friends in the other body will move.

Now, let me just talk a little bit about what this is all about. It is really three general areas: First, allowing everyone to contribute more to their 401(k)s and their IRAs. This could not come at a more important time. The fact that you can contribute another $1,000 into your IRA account this year is very important to people, and they are taking advantage of it. In the first 6 months of this year alone, there has been a 25 percent increase in IRA contributions, and it is needed, and never needed more than now.

With regard to 401(k)s, this year you can put another $500 in, plus a catch-up, as the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. WELLER) talked about, another $500. Over time, another $5,000 and $10,000, up to $15,000. This is extremely important, again. I would like to accelerate that. I would hope that this House will take that up at some point so that we can immediately allow people to put more aside for their retirement. But at a minimum, let us make what we did permanent.

The catch-up provisions are extremely important to the baby boomers. The gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) talked about the baby boom generation not being prepared for retirement. It is true. Seventy-five million people have no retirement plan at all, other than what they might have saved in their own personal savings. They have no access to a 401(k), a simple plan, any kind of plan from their employer. We need to help these people.

We therefore said if you are over 50, you get to put in even more into your retirement plan, which is particularly helpful for women who have taken time out from the workforce to raise a family, and now want to come back in and need to be able to put together that nest egg quickly.

Finally, we permit for simplification of the plan, to help small businesses to be able to offer these plans. The gentleman from California (Mr. MATSUI) actually talked about it earlier, and I was going to get into it. I would ask the gentleman's indulgence, instead of me getting further into that issue, if I could yield some time to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. SULLIVAN), who is now here, to speak on the general issue.

I instead will cut my remarks short, except to say this, and that is that this is all about helping people save more for retirement. This House has passed this on a bipartisan basis, over 400 votes. What we are saying here today is it is time to move to make that permanent so people can plan. It is common sense policy. The Senate has not acted, the House has, the President is ready to sign the bill. Let us move forward.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma (Mr. SULLIVAN) as a final speaker.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of House Resolution 544. As a sponsor of this legislation, I feel it is important for Congress to make permanent the Economic Growth and Tax Reconciliation Act passed into law last year. I would like to thank my distinguished colleagues, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PORTMAN) and the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. CARDIN), for spending several years crafting this bipartisan legislation.
